LETTER TO THE EDTIOR

Former Cullman County resident, Tribune reporter recounts what he saw firsthand with President Bush on 9/11

Terry Abbott
Contributor

September 11, 2001 – Sarasota, Florida: It was a beautiful day as I stepped out of a bungalow at a tennis resort where President Bush and his traveling team, including Secretary of Education Rod Paige and I, had stayed overnight. As Chief of Staff at the U.S. Department of Education, I had flown with the President on Air Force One to Florida the day before to make appearances at schools as part of the effort to generate support for the passage of the President's No Child Left Behind education reform bill. Our job that morning, September 11, was to visit Emma Booker Elementary School in Sarasota, Florida, talk to the children about the importance of reading, and talk to the Congress and the nation about the need to enact federal education reforms.

The furthest thing from my mind that morning was a terrorist attack. I was not thinking at all about the Top Secret security briefing Secretary Paige and I had received at the White House a few months earlier, when the secret "Continuity of Government" plan, the "COG" as it was known, was explained to us. When I received that briefing, in the basement of the White House, about what our nation would do in the event of a massive attack, where the President's cabinet members would assemble, how the government would continue to operate, I remember thinking clearly "this will never happen."

All of us traveling with the President that day had been instructed to place our luggage outside the doors of the bungalows very early on the morning of September 11. The Secret Service would inspect all the luggage before it was loaded into vehicles and taken to the Sarasota Airport to be loaded onto Air Force One for the scheduled return trip to Washington that morning. As officials picked up the luggage, I headed down to the motorcade lineup to wait with Secretary Paige.

The Secretary and I expected to ride together that morning several cars behind President Bush, but just before we were to leave for the school, the President called for Secretary Paige to join him in the Presidential limousine. I climbed into a vehicle five or six cars behind the President with Sandy Kress, the President's in-house education adviser. As the motorcade rolled toward the school, Sandy and I talked about what we needed to do that day and about the prospects for the passage of No Child Left Behind. I looked out the windows of the motorcade and saw hundreds and hundreds of people lined up along the roadway to greet the President, most welcoming him with signs and applause, some protesting his presence.

As we arrived at the school and exited the car, we noticed the President and Secretary Paige being moved very quickly into the school. As Sandy and I walked up the sidewalk to go into the school, someone said something I couldn't make out. Then Sandy turned to me and said, "Did you hear what he said? A plane has crashed into the World Trade Center."

I was stunned. My first thought was that a small plane had accidentally crashed into one of the buildings. My immediate instincts were about the effects on our news event in Florida – and how what I assumed was a small plane crash would take up much of the media's attention that day at a time when we really needed to have the American people and the Congress focus on the importance of improving education.

The President, Secretary Paige, Chief of Staff Andy Card and others went to a classroom where the President was to read to students. Sandy Kress and I and others went into a separate area where the President was to address a larger group of students and the media. I made my way over to a television in the room and watched it on and off as we prepared for the start of what was to be the main event in that room.

And that's when it happened, the moment that changed the world: we saw the reports immediately that a second plane had crashed into the World Trade Center. » PAGE 4

(BONUS) PET OF THE WEEK

Bristol's ready to play!

CULLMAN COUNTY ANIMAL SHELTER

Bristol

W.C. Mann
craig@cullmantribune.com

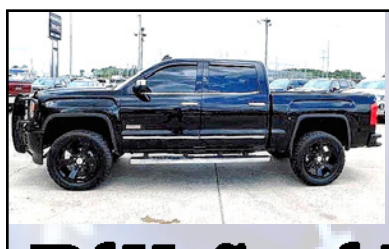

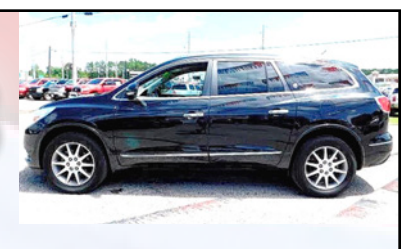

CULLMAN, Ala. – The Cullman County Animal Shelter has a few extra guests right now, so volunteer Donna Ruttkay introduces a bonus Cullman Tribune Pet of the Week:

Bristol is a husky/border collie mix who is around a year-and-a-half old. She's a ready-to-play, medium- to high-energy pet who's getting good on her leash and enjoys human company without being clingy. She likes getting out in the shelter's yard and splashing in the kiddie pool.

Bristol has a taste for outdoor recreation and could become a good hiking or companion dog.

Animal shelter staff and volunteers work with their dogs to make sure they are accustomed to being around people, walking on a leash and practicing good behavior.Several of the shelter's dogs have even been "hired" to work as therapy and special needs service dogs.

Bristol's adoption fee is $90 which includes: DHLPP vaccine, Bordetella vaccines, rabies vaccine, wormer, general exam at the vet, spaying, microchip, free 30-day health insurance policy issued by 24PetWatch (with valid email only) and a free bag of food from Cullman Pet Depot (you must pay sales tax). » PAGE 5

Higher levels of belly fat are associated with lower vitamin D levels in obese individuals, according to data presented at the European Society of Endocrinology annual meeting. Obesity is a global epidemic and contributes to an estimated 2.8 million deaths per year worldwide. Vitamin D deficiency is typically associated with impaired bone health but in recent years has also been linked with higher risks of acute respiratory tract infections, auto-immune diseases and cardiovascular diseases. Low vitamin D levels could therefore have wide-ranging and undetected adverse effects, although more research is required to confirm the role of Vitamin D in these conditions. A link between low vitamin D levels and obesity has previously been reported, but whether this effect is more associated with the type and location of fat was undetermined.

New research has found that taking vitamin B6 could help people to recall their dreams. The study, published online ahead of print in Perceptual and Motor Skills, included 100 participants, taking high-dose vitamin B6 supplements before going to bed for five consecutive days.

Among women planning to conceive after a pregnancy loss, those who had sufficient levels of vitamin D were more likely to become pregnant and have a live birth, compared to women with insufficient levels of the vitamin, according to an analysis by researchers at the National Institutes of Health. This study appears in The Lancet Diabetes and Endocrinology.

A Benchmark Automotive Group Dealership

9/11 (from Front)

All of us in the President's group knew right away the awful truth – America was under attack. I grabbed my cell phone and immediately called my wife Molly, who, with our son Lane, was in Alabama visiting my parents on their way to moving to Washington, DC to join me as I served in the young administration. I told Molly: "Turn on the TV. We're under attack. I'm fine."

For me at that point it was all instinct. I frantically tried to reach my office at the Department of Education by phone. The cell phone service was already very spotty but the early version of the Blackberry that I was carrying worked. I emailed with my assistant, Cheri Arnott, at the Department of Education, and was told that the White House was frantically trying to get in touch with me. Cheri said the White House wanted me to get Secretary Paige prepared to stay at the school and finish up the event for President Bush so that he could leave immediately after making initial remarks to the nation about the attacks.

I ran outside the building and saw President Bush and Secretary Paige coming toward my position. The President walked right past me, within five feet, as he went to the library area where we had gathered for him to address the nation for the first time about the attacks.

As Secretary Paige reached me I grabbed him and said, "Sir, I need your speech material. I've got to rewrite it quickly. You have to stay here and finish this event for the President, and he has to leave because of what's happened." I'll never forget the look on Secretary Paige's face as he said, "What's happened? I don't know." In the immediate chaos, apparently no one had told the Secretary of Education what had just happened. So it fell to me to explain: "Mr. Secretary, the nation has been attacked by terrorists. They have flown two planes into the World Trade Center. There may be thousands dead."

The Secretary was immediately calm. That was one of Rod Paige's greatest strengths – an absolutely unshakeable focus on forging ahead and getting things done. Whether that came from his years as a football coach or as superintendent of the Houston school district, seventh largest in the country, I don't know. I told him that day, "You must have ice water in your veins." He was as stoic as anyone could be.

I stood about 10 to 15 feet to the President's right as he announced to the audience, to audible gasps, that America had been attacked, and promised that terrorism against the United States "will not stand."

Immediately after he finished the remarks, the President again walked right past me and exited the building. We had been directed to stay behind at the school and finish the event and do anything we could to comfort those who had just heard the news. Secretary Paige stepped to the podium and gave his newly rewritten remarks to finish up the event.

Secretary Paige and I exited the building moments later. The President was gone – already en route to the Sarasota Airport. My first instinct was that we had to get protection for Secretary Paige because in the federal government, American-born cabinet secretaries are all in line of succession to the presidency. No one knew at that point if the entire nation was under attack, if our leaders were being targeted. I only had my instincts – that the Secretary of Education – I believe at the time he was 11th in line of succession to the presidency – had to be protected.

So I ran to the assembled local police, told them who Secretary Paige was, and told them we needed to protect him immediately in the event that he too was targeted as part of a broader attack. The police responded immediately, hurrying Secretary Paige into a squad car for a trip to the Sarasota Airport to try to catch up with President Bush and Air Force One before they left. The Secretary and I rode together to the airport as the police officer turned up the commercial radio station so we could hear news about the attacks.

When we arrived at the Sarasota Airport we learned that Air Force One was gone, and Secretary Paige and I were stranded in Sarasota. The federal government immediately dispatched a special military aide to join the Secretary at the airport as a special information envoy to keep him informed of developments. I stuck close by the Secretary and the military aide to keep up with what was going on.

I had always heard about the phenomena known as the fog of war – how in war time situations mistakes are made, information can be wrong, decisions difficult. In those next moments, I witnessed that first hand.

We learned very shortly afterward that the Pentagon had been attacked. Then shortly afterwards the military aide told us of reports that a plane had crashed on the National Mall in Washington. That turned out, of course, to be false.

And then most startling: a few minutes later the military aide informed the Secretary of reports that the U.S. government had shot down a passenger plane in Pennsylvania. That scenario seemed entirely plausible to us at the time – the nation was under attack by multiple airliners, so it made sense the government might have to shoot one down if it was considered a threat.

We learned later, of course, that United Flight 93 had actually crashed after the heroic actions of passengers who were determined to stop the terrorists before they could crash another plane into a building.

Reports already were beginning to come out that other buildings and individuals might become targets in this attack, even Air Force One itself. When I heard that, I froze: my two high-school age daughters, in class in their hometown in Alabama, knew that I was scheduled to fly on Air Force One back to Washington with the President that day. If they heard that Air Force One might be targeted, that might be terrified.

With a few frantic tries, I was able to get through on the cell phone to their school, where I talked with their mother and asked her to go see the girls in their classroom and let them know I was okay, and that I was NOT on Air Force One.

The government soon made the unprecedented decision to ground all air traffic across the nation. Secretary Paige and I were left there at the Sarasota Airport with the military aide and no way back to Washington. All I knew was that I had responsibility for a very important leader of the government, and so his safety continued to be my number one priority.

As we watched the news unfold on the television sets in the airport, I stayed in contact with my office by Blackberry. Other leaders of the Department of Education — I believe Deputy Secretary Bill Hansen, a great and solid leader in his own right — were in charge at the building. I remember telling my assistant Cheri I thought they should all get out of the building, but of course, they were way ahead of me. The Secretary was concerned about the safety of those 5,000 people in the Department of Education.

Soon, Secret Service agents arrived from Tampa to put Secretary Paige under protective cover. The secret Continuity of Government operation we had been briefed about months earlier was working. The agents put us in vehicles and drove us back to Tampa to an office building for safety. They did a great job of protecting the Secretary and keeping him informed. As we drove to Tampa, the Secretary was very quiet, closing his eyes and listening closely to the radio. I wish I knew what he was thinking, but I couldn't even imagine.

After we were briefed by the Secret Service, the agents took us to a hotel where Secretary Paige was put into a room and placed under 24-hour guard. I had another job to do at that point: Air Force One had left that morning with the Secretary's luggage and mine, and we had no clothes! I borrowed a van from the hotel and drove to a K-Mart in Tampa to buy clothes for the two of us. I walked around the K-Mart picking out clothes in an almost surreal scene: people were trying to go about normal day-to-day activities but families whispered quietly to one another, and shoppers moved around with a look that could only be described as shock. I felt the same way.

That night I peeked outside my hotel room door a couple of times and looked down the hall to see the Secret Service agent sitting dutifully right outside Secretary Paige's door. The Secret Service agents did their job that day, just like they always do. It was a comfort to see the agent out there.

After a sleepless night, the next morning we got word from the White House that a military transport plane, a C-130, was at the Sarasota Airport and that we might be able to catch a ride back to Quantico, Virginia (Reagan National Airport was closed, of course) that day if we hurried.

We took that chance because the Secretary badly wanted to get back to Washington to help the President and to check on the people who worked for him at the Department of Education.

The Secret Service drove us back to Sarasota and we made it in time to board the plane. We had arrived in Florida on the best airplane in the world, Air Force One. We were going back on a loud, rattling troop transport plane. And that was just fine with us.

As we flew back to the Washington area that day, I saw something I had never seen before; the skies were completely devoid of air traffic. We were the only plane in the sky that I could see. There was still so much uncertainty at that point, I remember clearly thinking "I sure hope someone knows that we're up here in the sky and that we're supposed to be up here." It was a nervous flight back, but when we landed in Quantico, we were glad to be back.

The whole world changed that day. Nearly 3,000 people were killed by a terrorist organization that still targets us and targets freedom around the world today, eight years later. I worry that too many Americans have nearly forgotten what happened that day.

I will never forget what I saw and felt that day. And I hope most Americans never forget it. For our safety, we can't afford to forget.

More than 150 robotic surgeries performed at Cullman Regional in a year

Mary Beth Sellers
Cullman Regional

CULLMAN, Ala. – In August 2018, Cullman Regional debuted its da Vinci Xi Surgical System with the goal of improving the community's access to minimally-invasive surgery. Now, a little more than a year later, the hospital celebrated a milestone by completing more than 150 robotic surgeries.

The da Vinci Xi system, locally known as "Leo," provides minimally-invasive surgical options for patients who have prostate, kidney, bladder or colon cancer, as well as for those in need of hernia repair, bariatric surgery or gynecological procedures.

Benefits of robotic surgery include less pain, reduced scarring and quicker recovery times for patients.

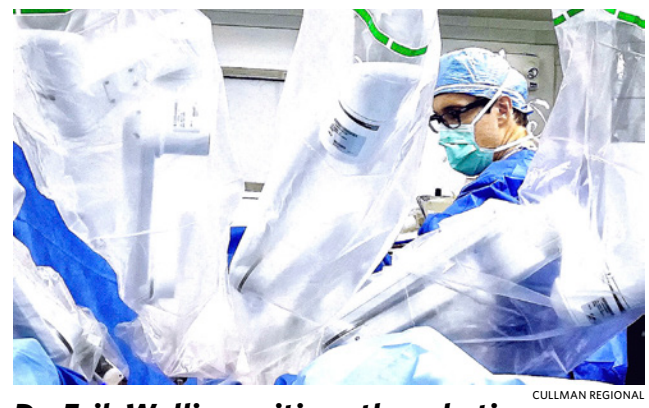

"I am very proud of the Cullman Regional Robotics team.

"In a little over a year, we have reached more than 150 da Vinci robotic surgeries," said Cullman Regional Chief Medical Officer Dr. William Smith.

"We are excited to continue growing our robotics program in order to offer additional minimally-invasive surgical options to the communities we serve."

Robotic-assisted surgery allows specially trained surgeons to perform a wide range of delicate and complex operations through a few small incisions. da Vinci Xi technologies provide unparalleled precision, dexterity and control for the performance of minimally-invasive surgery. Cullman Regional's robotic surgeons include Urologist Erik Wallin, robotics medical director; general surgeons Mac Cottingham and Brad Moody; and gynecologist Randy Yarbrough.

For more information about robotic surgery or services provided by Cullman Regional, visit www.CullmanRegional.com or call 256-735-5600.

Sunflowers (from Front)

Christy Perry
christy@cullmantribune.com

SIMCOE, Ala. – Sunflowers, also known as the "happy" flowers, have a knack for sparking joy and creating smiles. That is what the Haynes family hopes the fields of sunflowers they planted along Alabama Highway 69 in Simcoe bring for passersby. The sea of huge yellow flowers is in perfect bloom now for the community to enjoy.

When The Tribune caught up with Darrel Haynes, he was at his barn unloading corn with his sons Ben and Bart. A friendly Siamese barn cat played in and around the farm equipment, unfazed by the sounds of the busy farm. Haynes grew up on the farm in Simcoe and still farms full-time today.

He explained how the sunflowers came to be, saying, "A few years ago, just on a whim, we planted a patch of sunflowers. We had bought some dirt that was nasty. We bought a big farm and this one spot was just kind of a trash dump.

"We didn't have it cleaned up in time to plant soybeans. In was in July and we got that spot of dirt cleaned up and wondered what to do with it so we planted a patch of sunflowers."

Haynes planted the first sunflowers on a back road with very little traffic, but the huge blooms caught people's attention.

"When they started blooming, it just exploded with curiosity and people wanting to take pictures," he said.

The next year, they decided to plant sunflowers in a more prominent location for everyone to enjoy. They chose to plant them in a field located on Alabama Highway 69 across from Taylor's Produce in the Simcoe community.

"We do it as a gift to the community, a gift for people to enjoy. We get the enjoyment of people enjoying it," he smiled.

"There's not a whole lot of farmers compared to the rest of the folks. Folks get frustrated following tractors, smelling chicken litter or maybe somebody's cow being out.

"We decided it was just a gift of a peace offering or whatever you might want to call it."

Haynes laughed as he recalled a recent request from a woman interested in the sunflowers.

He explained, "A lady came and wanted to buy 40 blooms. I told her that they weren't for sale. I could see the rejection on her face. She said, 'My daughter is getting married and we just thought it would be so pretty to have a bouquet.'"

Haynes replied, "I didn't know it when we planted that bunch of sunflowers, but the good Lord had you in mind and we planted that patch of flowers for you and your daughter. If you need every bloom in that field, you can have every bloom in that field. That's why we planted them."

Haynes said she began to cry as he told her to gather all the flowers she needed.

He said, "That's the way we feel about it. Sunday, someone called and said that I needed to ride down to my sunflowers. When I asked why, the person said, 'It's Grand Central Station!' I drove down there and I started crying because there were so many people down there taking pictures."

Haynes referred to other farmers in Alabama who have sunflower patches who charge people for pictures or for blooms. He said that was never his intention. It was a selfless gesture to others and he welcomes visitors.

The visitors to the colorful field are steady according to Vanessa Taylor, who runs the produce stand across the road.

"People started coming in Friday or Saturday to take pictures and there has been about 10-12 cars just this morning!" said Taylor, who shared that sunflowers do well in the heat. "Those sunflowers, this time last week, you might find a dozen or so. Overnight, they just popped."

Taylor recalled last year's sunflower patch.

"They had them on the backside of the hay field and you couldn't get through the dirt road for all the people. It was unreal."

This is the fourth year Haynes has planted sunflowers and the second year at their current location. He warned that the sunflowers will be pretty for the next few days but will soon begin to fade. He loves that people come to take pictures.

"Just enjoy them. That's my pay," he smiled.

Burgermeister (from Front)

craig@cullmantribune.com

CULLMAN, Ala. – Being Burgermeister of Cullman's Oktoberfest celebration can be a hectic duty during the event, but Steve Moore, the city's 2019 selection, may actually have to slow down a little to take on the task.

Moore, an Arkadelphia native and 1979 graduate of Hanceville High School, is an operations manager at the Wal-Mart Distribution Center, and has worked for the company for 36 years. When not at work, he's, well, at work, managing his own cattle and hay farm just outside Cullman, which can be another full-time job in itself. If that is not enough, he is a member and former chairman of the board of the United Way of Cullman County and has served on the Cullman City Schools Foundation Board. He and his wife Nancy Clemmons Moore have four children: Brittany, Nash, Caitlin and Hunter. They also have four grandsons: Kaden, Spencer, Liam and Cohen.

Moore got into Oktoberfest through his wife, whose parents Phil and Pat Clemmons started some of the traditions of Cullman's celebration like the mums that decorate downtown businesses and area homes, and the giant hay people that greet visitors on U.S. Highway 31 and in Depot Park. (www.cullmantribune.com/2019/09/10/i-love-cullman-i-love-oktoberfest-i-give-this-my-whole-heart-and-soul/) His own first contact with Oktoberfest came at St. John's Evangelical Protestant Church, where the Moore and Clemmons families have both been long active.

Moore explained, "I've been involved in Oktoberfest for about 15 years. How I got involved in Oktoberfest was when I first started dating my wife now, we went to St. John's Church. They have an Oktoberfest meal every year. My wife's parents, Phillip and Pat Clemmons, were very involved in Oktoberfest. When I went to that dinner, I ended up getting volunteered to wash dishes. So I washed dishes at the church, and, you know, that became my job for a few years after that."

After his wife's parents died in a tragic plane crash in 2008, according to Moore, "I took on putting up the hay people, because my wife's parents are the ones that started that. They were in Germany one year, a trip to Germany, and saw the hay bale people, and thought that would be neat to bring back to Cullman. My wife sort of took that on after her parents got killed and, since we did hay anyway, that seemed to fit. So, we've done that every year since."

The Clemmonses were honored posthumously, named the 2008 Burgermeisters, and Nancy Moore and her siblings shared the task that year to honor their parents' memory.

Said Steve Moore, "That was really sort of my first experience with what a Burgermeister did, you know, just going places with my wife that week."

In 2012, Nancy Moore was named Burgermeister, and Steve Moore was the faithful spouse, attending all the events and getting even more of a feel for the role that he would one day assume.

What does it mean to be the 2019 Burgermeister?

Moore said, "Mostly, it's a huge honor for me, I feel like. You know, not everybody gets to be Burgermeister, and I was very honored that they chose me to be Burgermeister this year. I look forward to it. It'll be a busy week, I'm sure, that week, trying to attend all the events and be the face of Oktoberfest, or trying to be the one that welcomes people and encourages people to come and take part in our events and stuff that go on during Oktoberfest that week. Personally, for me, it means a lot, because it was a very big honor to be chosen to be Burgermeister."

He continued, "I think that Cullman's German heritage, it means a lot to try to keep that in the forefront, you know, because it was a German town from years ago. And one of the things that the Oktoberfest Committee has managed to do through all of this Oktoberfest is- you know, we were sort of a unique entity when I first was involved in Oktoberfest, because it was a dry Oktoberfest. Not very many Oktoberfests- we were probably the only Oktoberfest that was a dry Oktoberfest.

"Then Cullman went wet, and since Cullman's went wet, it's opened up a lot of other venues, and the event has really grown. But one of the best things that I think that the committee has continued to do is they've managed, even through all of this and the growth, and the going wet, the changes, they've managed to keep it a very family-friendly event that just welcomes people of all ages to have a good time. I think that's the biggest takeaway for me from Oktoberfest."

What are you most looking forward to during the celebration?

Moore answered, "I look forward to just, you know, seeing all the people come out and enjoy themselves. And I look forward to all the entertainment that we're going to have that week; they've already announced Taylor Hicks, and some other folks are coming.

"It's a really good event. It's great for the kids; you know, they have a kids' zone for the kids to come to. And Senior Day is a big day, too, so that's a biggie to look forward to: all of the seniors from the county get to come out, enjoy the entertainment and have a meal. That's what I look forward to."

Cullman Oktoberfest 2019 will take place Oct. 2-5. For more information, visit https://cullmanrecreation.org/cullman-oktoberfest/ or www.facebook.com/cullmanoktoberfest.

Bulldogs, Eagles, Raiders hitting the road; Warriors and Aggies hosting region matchups

Nick Griffin
nick@cullmantribune.com

(2-1) Addison (2A Region 7) at (3-0) Red Bay (2A Region 7)
The Bulldogs bounced against Winston County last week after a rough trip to Piedmont two weeks ago in which turnovers prevented a big win for Addison. Now that region play has begun, playoff contenders will begin to separate themselves from the rest of the pack and the Bulldogs plan to be part of that group once again.

Addison's running game was put together by committee against the Yellow Jackets with five different players finishing with at least five carries in the win and collecting over 200 yards on the ground as a team. The Bulldogs jumped out to a 22-0 start over Winston County and held an all-state running back in check throughout the game. Red Bay is off to a fast start on both sides of the ball, winning their first three games by a combined score 110-20. The Tigers are scoring just under 37 points per game right now playing very well on the defensive end.

Addison defeated Red Bay 39-12 a season ago but with another region win on the line, it'll be important for the Bulldogs to get off to another fast start against a good Tigers team at home.

(3-0) Good Hope (4A Region 5) at (0-3) Tanner (2A Region 7)
Good Hope is coming off a road win over Cordova that made them 1-0 in the region but now the Raiders will have to travel once again, this time to face the Tanner Rattlers. The Rattler are 0-3 so far this season with losses West Limestone, Clements and Colbert County.

Running the ball is the primary focus for Good Hope offensively but quarterback Tanner Malin has done a good job of bringing some balance to that side of the ball this season. Malin threw a pair of touchdowns at Cordova and ran in another to lead the Raiders to a win and he, along with running back Colton Bagwell, have made Good Hope formidable on offense yet again. The Raiders are allowing just over 16 points per game this season and with a struggling Tanner team in their sights this week, they'll have another opportunity to show what they can do.

Good Hope took last year's matchup with the Rattlers 32-0 and will certainly be the favorite when it travels to Tanner Friday night.

(2-1) Cold Springs (2A Region 5) at Sumiton Christian (2A Region 5)
After falling to Berry on the road 43-15 in week two, the Eagles returned home last week and edged Southeastern 34-33 to get region play started with a win. Now, Cold Springs is back on the road, this time to take on another region foe in Sumiton Christian.

The Eagles of Sumiton Christian are 0-3 on the season but have fought a couple of tight games in the season opener against Hanceville and last week at Sulligent. Opponents are scoring just over 37 points per game against Sumiton Christian at this point in the season and are being held to just 20 points per game offensively.

Cold Springs' defense has had a couple of rocky nights early in the season as well, allowing 43 and 33 to Berry and Southeastern respectively after shutting out Meek in week one.

Eagles running back Ayden Alexander went well over 200 yards and collected four touchdowns on the ground last week in Cold Springs' win over Southeastern and if he and the offense can continue to build momentum off that performance this week, the Eagles will give themselves a chance to pick up another win on the road.

(1-2) West Point (5A Region 7) vs. (1-1) Lawrence County (5A Region 7)
The Warriors kicked off the season with a win at Fairview but are now 1-2 after Arab came from behind to defeat them 49-35 and Hamilton took last week's matchup 24-12 to hand West Point its first region loss of the season.

Lawrence County fell to Madison Academy in its season opener but collected a 27-14 region win over Hayden last week. The Red Devils were held to just seven points in the loss to Madison Academy, but the offense appeared to find more of a rhythm in game two. Defensively, Lawrence County allowed 32 points per game a season ago but has held its opponents to 17 and 14 points in its first two games this season.

West Point Quarterback Will Cochran has had some success through the air this season with Kobe Bowers and Whitt Laney proving to be a problem for opposing defenses, but the Warriors will need some defensive stops to get a region win this week. Defense was an issue for West Point in 2018 and some of those problems appeared to be pop up in the Arab game but with a region foe coming to town Friday night, the Warriors have a chance to collect a big win and work their way up the region standings.

(2-1) Fairview (4A Region 7) vs. (2-1) St. John Paul II (4A Region 7)
It took two calculators to keep up with Fairview's offense last week. The Aggies racked up nearly 600 yards of offense on the road against D.A.R. and over 500 of them were on the ground, led by running back Tyvn Ellis who posted an eye-popping 312 yards and six touchdowns in the win. That would be a solid season for some players, but Ellis collected it all in Grant, Alabama Friday night.

Now, Fairview will have to regroup, refocus and prepare to host St. John Paul II in a regional showdown at Dafford Smith Stadium. The Falcons are 2-1 this season but are coming off a 43-29 loss to Priceville that put them behind in the region standings. However, scoring points hasn't been a problem for St. John Paul II so far. The Falcons are averaging 37 points per game and after playing a shootout at D.A.R., that could be a concern for the Aggies. Fairview is scoring right at 37 points per game as well so things appear to be ramping up for another high scoring affair unless the Aggies can duplicate their defensive showings from their first two games.

Fairview outgained West Point despite falling in the season opener 14-6 before handling Hanceville 41-6 and keeping the Bulldogs offense out of the end zone in that game. You won't lose many games if you can run the ball like the Aggies did a week ago but if Fairview can hit its stride defensively as well, it'll have a great chance to start region play 2-0.
