Wallace State Community College ranked Best Online Community College in Alabama in 2020; 16th in nation

Russell Moore
WSCC

HANCEVILLE, Ala. – Wallace State Community College has been ranked No. 1 among Alabama community colleges in the 2020 Best Online Community College Rankings and 16th in the nation, according to the Guide to Online Schools released by Optimal this week.

The national list includes the top 25 accredited schools offering online education across the country, while the state ranking highlights the top community colleges in each state. Both the overall and state lists were ranked using several important factors, including retention rate, graduation rate, percentage of online enrollment data, and the number of online associate degrees offered.

These data points were all collected from the National Center of Education Statistics. Optimal researched 550 community colleges, and gave each a score based on these factors.

Only schools that scored 70 percent or higher were included on the rankings. In order to be considered, community colleges must be regionally accredited and offer at least one fully online associate degree.

Wallace State students already had numerous online course offerings to choose from each semester, and the opportunity to earn associate degrees and certificates entirely online prior to the COVID-19 pandemic. The COVID-19 pandemic forced all Wallace State courses to transition temporarily to an online platform during the Spring 2020 semester and many of those innovative methods continue.

Because all classes, even those offered on campus classes made some use of the college's online learning management system Blackboard for course syllabi, posting grades and other resources, the college had a head start on the necessary transition to online classes in spring due to the pandemic.

Students enrolled in general studies or liberal arts can earn an Associate in Arts or an Associate in Science completely online. Specific Associate in Applied Science degrees can be earned in programs like Accounting, Computer Science, Graphic Art and Design, Child Development and Health Information Technology. Online certificates can be earned in a number of programs as well, including General Studies, Child Development, Medical Coding and Pharmacy Technology. Adult education and continuing education classes are also available online.

The college also has added the full array of student services to its virtual offerings, so students can meet with recruiters, advisors, admissions and financial aid staff, tutors, success coaches, career services, mental health counselors and more, without coming to campus, if needed. To learn more, or contact any office, visit www.wallacestate.edu/virtual-student-services.

Since Wallace State participates in the STARS, statewide articulation system, students can take classes guaranteed to transfer from Wallace State to any of the public colleges and universities in Alabama, as well as many of the state's private colleges and universities.

Many students earn an associate degree on the way to a bachelor's degree and transfer up to two years of credit to the university, saving thousands of dollars along the way. Students who start at Wallace State and finish at the university routinely do as well or better than students who begin at the university. The college also serves a large population of transient students who are home from a university but interested in taking required courses that they can then transfer for a fraction of the cost.

Wallace State is known for outstanding student success and high caliber instruction. The college is home to two prestigious Jack Kent Cooke Scholars, an Achieving the Dream Leader College, an Aspen Prize nominee, and All-Steinway School, League for Innovation Award Winner, and a National League for Nursing Center of Excellence, among other accolades.

Students interested in earning college credit this summer can still enroll for a second 5-week mini term that runs June 25-July 30. Registration for Fall Semester begins Tuesday, June 16. Fall semester classes begin Monday, Aug. 17.

FUNNY THINGS FROM YESTERDAY

Trying to catch a donkey

Robert N. Tidwell, Sr.
robertntidwellsr@gmail.com

Things have changed a lot since I was a young boy. Nowadays, children have many games and toys for entertainment: video games, VCRs and now cell phones also occupy a lot of time.

Back when my brother Dale and I were youngsters, we had to create our own entertainment. After we moved to town, however, we had several boys close by, so we did have playmates. Having a big crowd around always made things more fun. There were four or five boys between the age of 10 to 13 who lived near us in the South Park area. Most of you know how much mischief this many boys, in this age group, can get into, and we were always looking for something to do.

There was a large pasture close to where we lived, and the man who owned this pasture had several donkeys in it. As boys can think sometimes, we thought we could ride those little donkeys if we caught them.

So, we set about to herd them up. Now, wild, unbroken to ride, donkeys don't herd up too well. So our next move was to chase one down and ride it.

We all chased several different ones without much success. Finally, my brother Dale caught a little jenny by the tail. He hollered for the rest of us to come and help him.

Many of you may know what came next. You guessed it—that little jenny donkey perfectly placed both hind hoofs right smack dab in the middle of Dale's stomach. Needless to say, we didn't get to ride that little jenny that day.

It seems that Dale, right then and there, developed an aversion to getting behind a donkey, mule, horse, cow or any animal with hooves and four feet on the ground.

From there, we boys went on to other adventures.

BILLY BOB'S STORIES AND STUFF

Have we suddenly found ourselves in a new abnormal?

Bill King
Tribune
Contributor

Sadly, I have nothing humorous or light-hearted this week. For the last several weeks, which have turned into months now, our lives have been turned upside down. To say that things are not the way they used to be would be a gross understatement. Many of us have most likely looked around at particular things many times and said, "Oh that could never happen here." Strangely enough, some of those very things have and are happening here. These are indeed strange days in which we find ourselves living.

I can't find it within myself to call what we have been going through the "new normal." I don't find much normal about these days, and I don't want this way of life to become normal. I refuse to call this the "new normal." Instead, I choose to call it a "new abnormal."

I hope and pray that many of the events of the past few weeks will never become the accepted in America. My heart is grieved over the cruel mistreatment and unjust behavior we have witnessed in our streets. No human beings should be mistreated in such manner.

At the same time, I am deeply disturbed by the criminal reactions of some in response. As we've heard so many times, two wrongs never make things right. I pray for the day when we can and will treat one another not only as we expect to be treated, but more importantly, as God expects us to treat one another.

I'm also praying for the day when we hear that a vaccine for this terrible virus that has plagued our world has been created. I remember as a child eating a sugar cube that had a polio vaccine in it. I'm praying that something in similar fashion will be soon coming. I'm praying that places being closed that are a vital part of our lives will all open back up. I long for the day when churches and places of worship can be opened and filled with people without fear of spreading disease, sickness, and death.

I pray for the Sundays when we can lift our voices in musical unison and harmony to God.

I'm praying for the time when businesses can do business as they have done business for many years. I'm praying for those who have lost their jobs and their income to be able to return to work. I'm praying for our children and students to be able to return to the classrooms this fall.

I want them to be able to sit beside other students with a teacher standing in front of them, rather than sitting at home staring at a computer screen for their education.

I'm praying for a time when we aren't afraid to go to the hospital when we are sick, or to visit those who are sick. I'm praying for the sick, the dying, and those who are taking care of them. I'm praying for the time again when we can properly pay our respect to those who have left us, and comfort the families who mourn.

As much as I have enjoyed more time at home and with my wife than I've had in a long time, maybe even ever, I'm praying for the time when we can also get out and go freely.

I'm praying for a time when we don't have to cover our faces. I'm longing to stick out my hand to another brother or sister, and to wrap my arms around the people I love, and maybe even someone I don't even know.

I'm praying and I'm longing for the normal; not a new normal, and certainly not an abnormal. I'm praying for all this and more in the name of Jesus. Amen!

Going Bananas

By: Randy C. Hale

Standing in front of a large display of bananas, suddenly
I had the thought. If monkeys love bananas like they say, then why in all my years of grocery shopping, have I never saw one monkey on the Banana aisle?
Like the news, they say it, so we believe it and it makes sense, monkeys liking
bananas. I mean,
I like bananas, so reasonable to believe that monkeys do. So, as I take a few of these yellow treats, I look around as if to see a hairy chimpanzee pushing a cart
slam full to the checkout. Gee!
I wonder if there just might be an elephant near the goobers?

‘What Auburn has done for me’: Coach Pat Dye’s last team meeting

Jeff Shearer
AU Athletics

AUBURN, Ala. – As he had done 30 years before in this same venue, Pat Dye once again addressed his 1989 Auburn football team.

Three decades earlier, after the first Iron Bowl at Jordan-Hare Stadium, he told the victorious Tigers, “Tonight’s what our program’s all about. Ain’t no easy way in life, and it wasn’t easy out there tonight, but you were prepared for the task.”

All these years later, on the eve of the 2019 Iron Bowl, the ‘89 Tigers leaned in to hear every word their 80-year-old coach offered.

“We weren’t the favorites,” Dye said at the team’s 30-year reunion on Nov. 29, 2019.

“We might have been the underdogs. But that’s all right. Every morning I woke up all my life I’ve been an underdog.

“I had two older brothers, one of them two years older than me and one of them four years older than me.

“I got my (tail) whipped every day. I never liked it.

“Failing won’t hurt you. You don’t like it. It hurts you, but if you’ve got the right kind of stuff in you it’ll make you work a little harder next time.

“And that’s kind of what we’re made out of.”

It was, in a sense, Coach Dye’s last team meeting. One more opportunity to motivate, to encourage, to share his love for Auburn.

“Have you ever heard any of our opponents say, ‘Auburn outsmarted us?’” Dye asked.

“You never heard of Auburn outsmarting anybody while I was coaching, but we beat their (tail) to a pulp.

“Not only that, you could bet against them the next week and you’d win your money because they wouldn’t be able to get them all on the field.”

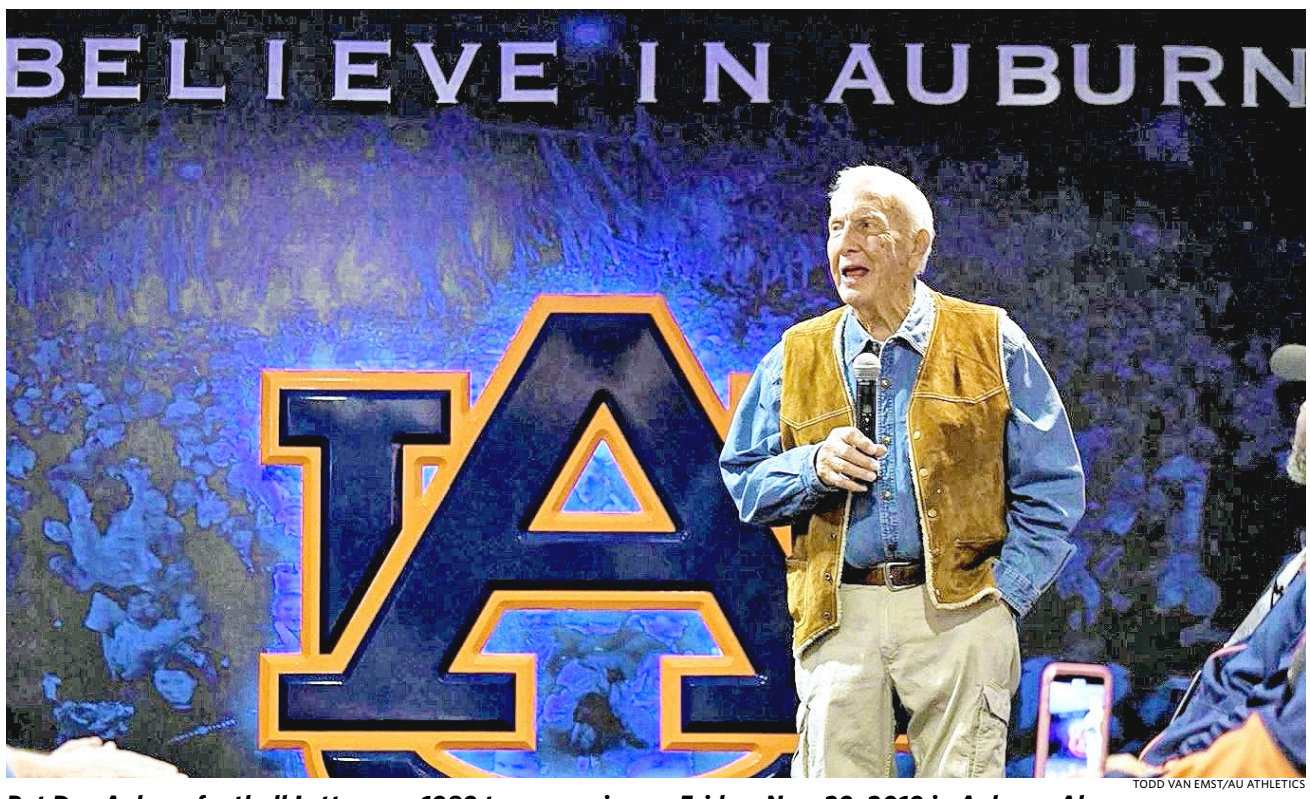

Dye recalled recruiting the players 35 years earlier, when these 50-year-olds were still teenagers.

“The guys who came through this program and the mamas and daddies that let me in their homes to recruit the kids to become a part of this institution, I’m grateful for them,” he said.

“Because I knew every time I went through the front door that I was going to present them with a chance to have a better life, if they stayed and played and went to school here.

“That’s true with all of the students, that’s not just football players and athletics. Be proud of the fact that you’ve got an Auburn background.

“The right kind of kids are coming to Auburn and it didn’t surprise me at all to see Auburn’s student body is the happiest student body in America.”

TODD VAN EMST/AU ATHLETICS
Pat Dye Auburn football Letterman 1989 team reunion on Friday, Nov. 29, 2019 in Auburn, Ala.

Members of the 1989 team wiped away tears as their coach continued, perhaps reflecting on the bonds they’d formed in their youth, back when preseason camp consisted of four-a-days.

“There’s a lot of love in this room,” Dye said. “Not just me to the players or players to me.

“It’s players to each other.

“The love that you’ve got for Auburn University. Nothing that you could give me means any more than how much you care about this institution and what It’s meant for all of us, and meant to all of us.”

Reflecting on his decision to become Auburn’s coach in 1981, Dye said he knew he was the right fit when he read the Auburn Creed.

“There’s not a morning or a day goes by, every day, I think how I have been blessed by my experience and being part of this institution, and I didn’t have anything to do with building it and making it like it is,” he said. “I just bought into what they already believed.

“When I picked up the Auburn Creed and read it, I didn’t know anything about Auburn, I said, ‘Damn, this is me. This is what I believe. I believe in hard work.’

“And I got on down there a little further and the line in there that resonates the loudest with me – ‘having a spirit that is unafraid,’ – now you think about that. Having a spirit that is unafraid. I said, ‘This is me.’ And it kind of took off from there.”

Now it wasn’t just the players who were crying. Through tears, the coach who had given so much to his school somehow still felt indebted.

“I could live another 80 years and I could never do for Auburn what Auburn has done for me.”

Where are they now: Tre Smith remembers ‘perfect opportunity’ at Auburn

Jeff Shearer
AU Athletics

AUBURN, Ala. – Faced with competing ultimatums, Tre Smith’s fledgling NFL career hung in the balance.

If he remained at the Atlanta Falcons’ preseason camp, he would fail his grad school final exams at Auburn. If he left training camp to take the tests, he’d get cut.

“I chose getting my master’s degree over staying,” said Smith, who earned his MBA from Auburn University’s Harbert College of Business. “It was a no-brainer. You can’t give up that to take the chance of making an NFL – I might not have even made the team. I could have gotten cut two days later then I wouldn’t have a degree or a team to play for.”

An Auburn running back from 2002-06, Smith’s NFL days were done, but he still had professional football to play – in Canada for the Hamilton Tiger-Cats.

“It was super fun,” said Smith, who capitalized on the league’s wider, longer fields, averaging 6.6 yards per carry in 2008 before playing defense in 2009, making 49 tackles. “It’s a way bigger field. All of the empty space, I loved it. Every time they handed the ball off to me, there was so much open space.”

An ankle injury in his second CFL season ended Smith’s playing career. Tre returned to Alabama, working as an IT manager in Montgomery, where he met his future wife, Rebecca. They’ll celebrate their sixth anniversary this summer.

“We met in Montgomery one day and haven’t separated since,” he said.

In 2012, the Smiths returned to his home state, Florida, where he develops software for an advertising company in Sarasota, not far from where Tre became a high school phenom in Venice.

During recruiting, Smith’s path to the Plains meandered. He first committed to Nebraska, dreaming of running the option. A coaching change in Lincoln led to a commitment to Florida, but when Steve Spurrier left for the NFL, Smith reconsidered his options.

Two of the coaches at his high school were Auburn graduates. The Tigers already had Carnell Williams and Ronnie Brown in the backfield, but Cadillac broke his collarbone in the 2001 Iron Bowl and Brown had yet to emerge as an All-SEC performer. Auburn offered a chance to make an instant splash.

“We need somebody to come in and make an impact now as a freshman at Auburn,” Smith said, recalling Auburn’s recruiting pitch. “That sounded like a perfect opportunity. They’re a top 10 school. I can be on ESPN and play as a freshman. That sounded awesome to me.”

Smith visited Vanderbilt and Nebraska. Harvard, with its Ivy League credentials but without athletic scholarships, offered an intriguing possibility.

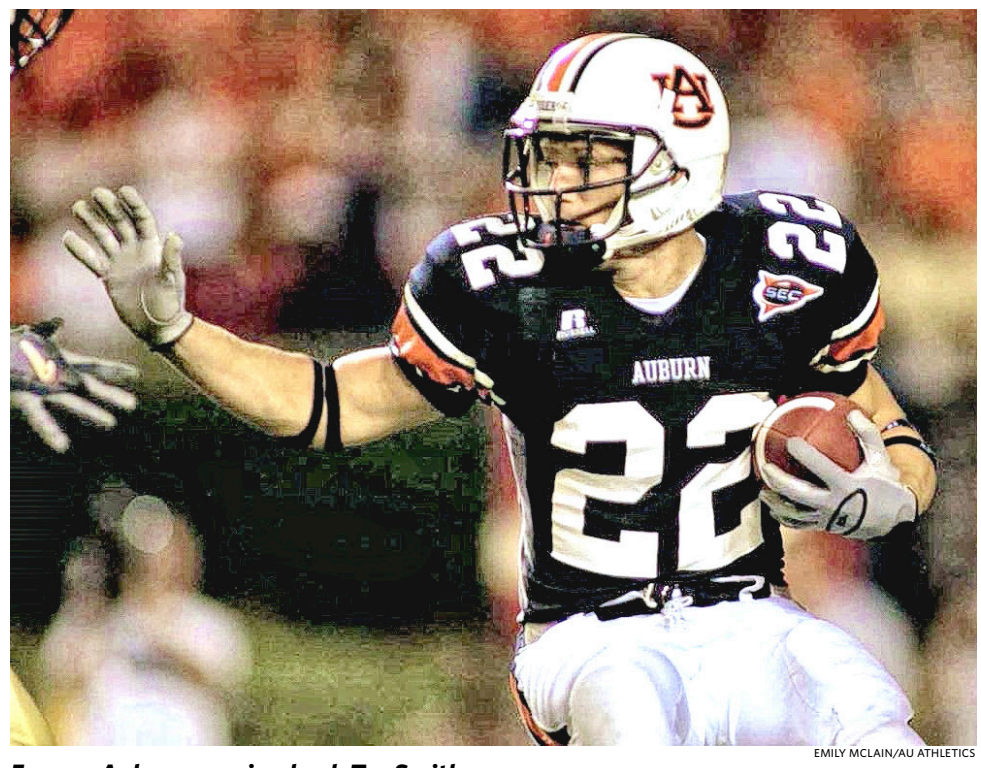

Like many before and since, Smith made up his mind after visiting Auburn’s campus.

“So much about Auburn fit in place,” he said. “Everything about it seemed better and nicer and more fun. You kind of feel it when you see a place, that you fit there.”

Backing up Williams and Brown in 2002, Smith rushed for 454 yards as a true freshman with more than one-fourth them coming in the biggest game of the season. Thrust into the spotlight after injuries to Carnell and Ronnie, Smith rushed for 126 yards in a 17-7 win in Tuscaloosa, the first of Auburn’s six straight Iron Bowl victories.

“That was super crazy,” said the 5-foot-10, 195-pound Smith, whose Iron Bowl freshman rushing total was second to only Stacy Danley’s 157 yards in 1987.

“As a true freshman, I was like, ‘Ah, just another game,’” he said. “I was so young that I didn’t even know how big of an impact it was until a few years later when I actually lived the rivalry for multiple years.”

EMILY MCLAIN/AU ATHLETICS
Former Auburn running back Tre Smith.

Smith’s Auburn career ended as it began, with a signature moment.

A fifth-year senior in 2006, he scored on a 15-yard return after a blocked punt to give Auburn the lead on its way to a 27-17 win over second-ranked Florida, the program to which he’d once been committed.

“That was a pretty big deal,” Smith said. “It looks like I was showboating, but one of my own players fell and hit the back of my foot.

“All I wanted to do was get off my feet and make sure that no matter what happened in the back, I was going to fly into the end zone. There’s no way I had time to think about like, ‘I’m going to flip into the end zone.’”

Nearly two decades after his first visit to Auburn, Tre Smith says he’s surprised how often fans still recognize him when he returns to the Plains.

On fall Saturdays on their six-acre ranch in central Florida, Tre and Rebecca, along with their daughter Alice, who turns 5 on the Fourth of July, and their 16-month-old son, Asa Tre, who looks just like his dad, schedule their day around Auburn’s kickoff time.

“We still support Auburn everywhere we go, especially on game days,” said Smith, who ranks sixth in program history with 644 career punt return yards.

“Tell everybody War Eagle, and I miss Auburn, and I love it. Can’t wait for the next season, hopefully I can get back up there and say hi to everybody.”

Toe and McCarty to pitch in College Summer Baseball Invitational

Ted Feeley
UAB Athletics

COLLEGE STATION, Tx.– UAB baseball graduated seniors Mac McCarty and Sylvester Toe will pitch in Collegiate Summer Baseball Invitational (CSBI) on Thursday, June 4, in the heart of Central Texas.

The CSBI in an invitation only, 4-team regionally formatted tournament featuring rosters composed of players from elite universities all around the country. The four teams were handpicked by the CSBI coaching staffs and more than 70 teams will be represented.

The opening night of the CSBI will air on ESPN2 with two games at 6 p.m. and 9 p.m. CST. The entire three-day event will be televised via a Pay-Per-View subscription which starts at $49.95 for the first 2,000 members and includes the entire 6-game tournament. 5% of the retail price of each subscription will be donated to No Kid Hungry (nokidhungry.org).

“This an incredible opportunity for our two guys to showcase their talent,” said head coach Perry Roth. “With so many people hungry to watch baseball again and the games airing on ESPN2, I believe they will have a lot of eyes on them. The fact they were invited to pitch in this says a lot about their talent.

“With the season shortened and the draft shortened, this is a great chance for scouts to get a look at them. We hope this opportunity opens the door for them both in professional baseball.”

McCarty was one of the most dominant closers in the country before the season came to an abrupt end. McCarty picked up five saves in 10 appearances. In 16 innings of work, he allowed just three hits and had a 0.00 ERA while striking out 16.

The Washington native and VCU grad transfer led the nation with a 0.31 WHIP and 1.69 hits per nine innings. His five saves led C-USA and ranked eighth nationally.

Toe was a perfect 2-0 in nine appearances as a senior. He pitched nine innings and had a 3.00 ERA while striking out seven. Throughout his four years, he made 45 appearances all from the bullpen. This year he picked up wins against Alabama State and Toledo.

The CSBI has been coordinated with local health officials and will include the full quarantining of everyone involved; From the players, coaches, umpires and broadcast team, everyone will be secured in a local hotel for the entirety of the week.

All participants will be tested for Covid-19 upon their arrival, and will be checked daily for any medical conditions.

In addition to ensuring the safety of all the participants off the field, the CSBI staff is putting rules in place to ensure player safety on the field as well.

Brian Nelson, the Director of Baseball Operations, said “all of these players are beyond excited to get back out on the field. They missed their spring seasons and have been cooped up at home for a while now. But this is also why we have to be smart and extra careful about how we let the players re-enter competitive play.

“We are putting multiple rules and limitations in place like pitch counts, innings and appearance limits. This will allow us to expand the rosters and give a lot of players the opportunity to participant in this awesome event. This is a free event for the players and we just want coaches and families to know that their kids are being taken care of.”

On the technology front, the CSBI has teamed up with Infinity Sports & Entertainment to ensure the streaming experience is as top notch as someone would expect a broadcast to be. Infinity Sports & Entertainment CEO, Uri Geva who has led Pay-per-View streaming events for almost 20 years, ranging for the Arena Football League, Professional Hockey, Minor League Baseball and International Cheerleading Championships was quoted - “This is an amazing opportunity to help showcase some of the best college baseball in the country, while raising funds for a charity and helping to provide some relief to everyone dealing with Covid-19’s challenges.”

Kelly Pulliam of Cullman Parks, Recreation and Sports Tourism's Therapeutic Recreation program told The Tribune, "Friends of the Miracle League raising the funds has allowed all Miracle League players to play for free during the spring season and sometimes the fall, too.

"Many families are now able to sign up since the registration fees are already paid for by the group. We have definitely seen an increase in number of players over the years, and I believe it's because of the efforts of the Friends of the Miracle League. They mean everything to the Miracle League and we can't wait to cheer for the Saints MC of Cullman County as they drive by all of us."

Miracle League athletes are encouraged to wear their sports uniforms and bring "thank you" signs to show the riders. Cars should be at the field by 10:45, and families should remain in their cars.

Home (from Front)

A coming addition to the back of the house will enable it to hold four more, for a total of 12 veterans who will be working on getting an education or finding jobs that will allow them to live independently.

SFW Founder/Director Jeremy Hogan told the crowd of local officials and supporters, "We're bringing something to Hanceville and Cullman County that north Alabama needs- I think all of Alabama needs, really, to be honest with you. I don't know very many houses in Alabama that'll house veterans that are actually doing what they're supposed to be doing."

When SFW started four years ago, according to Hogan, "Immediately, I wanted to find housing for veterans; 457 veterans are homeless at any given time in the state of Alabama. Fifty percent of those that are housed are on the verge of being homeless. That's unspeakable when you think about how many veterans we have in Alabama, 386,000 or something like that. That's ridiculous. It's our responsibility to help those men and women find that dream they fought for."

One piece of a bigger plan

The transitional home in Hanceville represents the initial phase of a much larger project that Hogan hopes to see come to pass in Cullman County: a multi-campus veterans transition program that will get veterans from across the state off the streets, provide them training in occupational and life skills and give them a foundation point from which they can successfully transition back into civilian life. The transitional program will last for up to 2.5 years with another 2.5 years of ongoing support, for a total of up to five years of assistance.

The plan includes:

- a 120-bed facility that will provide initial services like life skills, education and occupational training through partnerships with entities like Wallace State Community College, and addiction recovery for those who need it. The facility is intended to become self-sustaining, maintained largely by the residents themselves.
- short-term transitional homes: one for men and the other for women
- long-term apartments near the transitional homes where vets can live for 2.5 years after completing the residential program

In a previous interview, Hogan said of the issue of veteran homelessness and his plan to combat it, "I really, truly believe that, if they come out and have the proper educational training and prior training to transitioning back to civilian life, that we can take a huge chunk out of that problem, and change a lot of what happens right now."

Hogan hopes that, if the program proves successful for veterans, it can become the pattern for other programs serving the entire spectrum of America's homeless.

Said Hogan, "If we can nail this down and get this program going right, we could pretty much make this a cookie cutter program and do it for any homeless person whatsoever.

"I've done it on the 'cheapest/best quality' aspect, if you will. I'm trying to come up with the best-case scenarios and the best course of action with the least amount of economic impact, cost-wise, for us to do it. And this right here is it. If I can do this right here- we get this up and running and it's successful for a year or two- then I would like to present it as a complete homeless program, not just for veterans, because there is a lot in this program that you can learn, even not being a veteran. It benefits, anyway."

‘You’re saving lives’

LifeSouth hosts Cullman United Blood Drive

Maggie Darnell
maggie@cullmantribune.com

CULLMAN, Ala. – The annual City of Cullman v. Cullman County blood drive took place Friday, with four LifeSouth bloodmobiles parked around town. In past years, the drive has been a friendly “competition” between the City of Cullman and Cullman County; however, this year both parties united to do the drive as one.

LifeSouth Donor Recruiter Melanie Moore shared the importance of donating blood.

“If blood’s not there when you need it, you never get a second chance, ever,” she said. “With the unique role that LifeSouth plays in the community, a lot of people ask how are we are different from other blood providers. We’re your community blood provider. If somebody you love is hospitalized in north Alabama and they need blood, 100% of that comes from LifeSouth. We’re not taking from you and sending it off to Seattle or California; you’re donating locally and you’re saving lives of people that are close to you.”

She continued, “One unit has the potential to save up to three lives. Most people don’t need whole blood; they need other components- either red blood cells or the plasma or the platelets- so we take that donation and put it on a spinner to centrifuge and break it into those three components and that’s where the three lives come from. Usually, on this particular drive, we usually collect 150-plus units. That goes a long way. With three patients and all of their family members and friends and people that love them, that’s a huge impact in the community! We’re talking about 450 patients-plus, and that person is still with us today because that blood was there. That’s why it’s so important, because the need never goes away.”

With the blood collected by LifeSouth staying local and within north Alabama, Moore said, “It’s very good odds (on the blood staying in Cullman). Out of our district- our district hub is in Madison- we supply 14 hospitals in north Alabama. There’s a list on our website that you can go to. Cullman Regional is certainly one of them.”

LifeSouth is now testing blood for COVID-19 antibodies.

Said Moore, “Post COVID-19, we just started doing this today, testing the blood. Every donor that comes through is now having their blood tested for the COVID-19 antibodies, which is not the COVID-19 test, but there’s so many people that wonder if they were sick back in December, January, February. I was among them; I had some sort of respiratory crud that was going on and I was very curious to find out if maybe I was asymptomatic or just had a light case and had those antibodies. Unfortunately, I did not have the antibodies, but it’s a big deal and a lot of people are choosing to donate now because of that.”

Those who donated received an exclusive T-shirt and coupons from local restaurants, and this reporter can say she’ll be wearing that shirt and redeeming those coupons with pride, knowing she helped people.
