CULLMAN, Ala. – The Link of Cullman County on Monday welcomed 25 teams of golfers, from old hands to first-timers, to Terri Pines Country Club for the organization's annual Links for Literacy charity golf tournament.

The Link's Melissa Betts explained, "This supports all of our literacy programs, including our financial literacy programs.

"We have literacy programs in the elementary schools for school children, those who are at risk. We send mentors into the schools and help engage them in literacy activities and reading. We also have the financial literacy called "Wise Up" for ninth and 12th graders; that's also across the county in county schools, where we teach financial literacy.

"These are ways that we feel like, if you are able to have those literacy skills and those financial literacy skills, then it helps you not fall into some of the traps that poverty mentality can send you.

"This is our biggest fundraiser; it might end up being our only fundraiser this year, because of COVID.

"We have three scheduled for the spring, so this is really important for us today, to be able to have this tournament, and we're hoping that » PAGE 6

Man, woman charged with assaulting man along Hwy. 91

wendy@cullmantribune.com

CULLMAN, Ala. – A man and woman have been charged after allegedly assaulting a man along Alabama Highway 91 south of Holly Pond.

The Cullman County Sheriff's Office (CCSO) said deputies responded to a call late Sunday afternoon of a male victim in a ditch just off the highway.

Witnesses reported the man lying in the middle of the roadway prior to authorities arriving.

A witness said several motorists stopped to assist the victim.

According to the CCSO, deputies and investigators arrived and determined that the victim had been assaulted by two individuals, later identified as Melissa Dawn Hughes, 37, of Somerville and Nicholas Daniel McAlpine, 38, of Holly Pond.

The suspects were located by CCSO deputies and investigators and placed under arrested. After consulting with the Cullman County District Attorney's Office, the suspects were arrested and charged with third-degree domestic violence.

Monuments (from Front)

christy@cullmantribune.com

CULLMAN, Ala. – Protests and riots have been sweeping the nation in the aftermath of the death of George Floyd in Minneapolis May 25. The city of Birmingham saw residents take it upon themselves to try to take down the Confederate Soldiers and Sailors Monument in Linn Park Sunday night, May 31. Despite a large number of protestors staying in the area to pull down the statue of Charles Linn, the Confederate veteran for whom the park is named, the City called in a demolition crew to remove the monument Monday evening, June 1.

This is not the first time the debate over the removal of Confederate monuments has flared up, and it's not the first time Hanceville Mayor Kenneth Nail has spoken up about it. Back in May 2017, Nail sent a letter to the City of New Orleans, which had just removed monuments there, to say Hanceville would like to have the monuments in its community, at Veterans Park.

"I did send that letter to New Orleans and ask for those monuments and I had a good bit of conversation," said Nail. "I had four different black friends call me and say, 'Kenneth, we know who you are. We went to school with you. Some folks are calling you racist, this, that and the other.' To me, it's not about that. It's about history. I would never put anybody down. Slavery was a terrible thing."

Nail is just as passionate about the monument in Birmingham. He spoke with The Tribune at length about his feelings on the monuments and what they represent.

"Let's be honest, these monuments-that monument in Birmingham in Linn Park I think was 115 years old. That wasn't put down at the Civil War. That was put down after the fact because these Confederate veterans who were sons, husbands and relatives, a lot of them never came home. They never came home. Momma, grandma, cousin or whoever didn't have a grave to go to to pay their respects. That's what that was all about," he said. "They went there to pay their respects there because they had no idea where their remains was at. Probably dumped in a mass grave somewhere like one of my descendants in Vicksburg, Mississippi-dumped into a Confederate mass grave. So, that's what all that was about."

He continued, "Now, yes, I did send that letter back during the time because I think those monuments needed a decent place to go to and I still do. But, I have changed my, my friend Carl Jones who is a heritage guy for the Sons of the Confederate Veterans who is just a super guy, we talked about it. Matter of fact, I'll be honest, I got a call. I got a call and there was some discussion with the Lt. Governor's office and Carl called me and said, 'Are you interested in that monument in Birmingham?' And, my heart hurt really bad because to me, it is what it is. Was the Civil War a terrible time? YES! Was slavery wrong? ABSOLUTELY! But this was a tribute to men whose mommas and grandmas and people like that who were hurting. That's what that was all about. I don't know where that's got lost at, but that's what it was all about."

Nail said he's changed his mind about putting the monuments in a city-owned park, or any government-owned park. He thinks they should be on private property.

"I have changed my stance on that and this is why I am where I am at. Where I would be friendly to the cause of remembrance- and some of my black friends, I said, 'You guys know me. I don't have a problem with and I would love to have a Martin Luther King monument in our park.' It's different symbols mean different things to different people. You've been in my office; you've seen the war things I have.

"You've seen the Confederate flag I have on the corner of my desk. To me, does that mean hate? No, it means heritage. To me, does it mean we're putting anybody down? No, I can't help it because some stupid rednecks have hijacked the Confederate flag and has tried to make it out of something that it's not. Just like the Ku Klux Klan has marched with the Christian flag. Well, do we need to ban the Christian flag? They march with it too. Well, no!

"I understand, just like yesterday I told someone on Facebook, symbols mean different things to different people. If I see you going down the road and I can't holler at you, lots of times, I'll give you a peace sign. What does that mean? To me, it means hey, peace, hey, how you doing! Peace to you! That's what it means to me. To the older people who went to World War II, that means victory. To them it means victory. Probably to some gang, it probably means some gang symbol. I don't know.

"I have changed my stance on the monuments. I do not believe it is in the best interest to put the monuments in a city-owned park, a county-owned park or a state-owned park. Let me tell you why. My heart's in it and I have told you how I feel. But, what's going to happen when I'm gone? What's the next mayor going to say? What's the next city council going to say? What's the next governor going to say or the next commission going to say? What's that going to mean to them? So, for the benefits of the monuments, and for the love of the monuments and what I think they mean, I say- they are going to yank them up and move them anyway- the sad thing now, it's not just the Confederate monuments, hell it's all the monuments. They are desecrating them and doing this and doing that. I think those monuments should go to private property to be controlled by either the Sons of the Confederate Veterans or some other private organization for the care of them. We don't need some mayor five,10 or 50 years from now jerking these monuments up again. They need to be put somewhere for eternity where people can appreciate them. If you don't want to go to that private property and you don't want to see that monument, just don't go! If it hurts you or offends you or make you mad, just don't go! Simple!"

"When does it stop? Are we going to go up there and pull up the monument of Nathan Bedford Forrest-and his grave is right there and we are wanting to desecrate his grave? Where does it stop? I just don't understand it.

"My great-great grandfather is buried at Hokes Bluff, Alabama and I went over a while back and took pictures of his grave and all that. Grandpa joined the Confederate Army and he was 52 years old. Well, when he joined in 1863 or 64, I never understood. Grandpa, in the 1860s, was an old man at 52 years old. I thought, why did he join the Confederacy? Because they were old poor Irish and English men. We found out his son was killed by the Yankees in Vicksburg, Mississippi and dumped into a mass grave. When I go back to Vicksburg, I will make it a point to find that mass grave where my loved one is buried at and I think we can honor those guys.

"I think the problem in America is we have forgotten what love is and we forgot what respect is. My opinion might be a little different from yours. You had something the other day, you said something, I can't remember what it was but I was going to ask you about it. It was kind of a little bit different than what I thought but I was going to ask you about it but I wasn't mad at you about it. I love having conversations because you might spark something I never thought about on a topic. Love and respect will cure a lot of things."

CULLMAN, Ala. – This year has been an unusual one for spring sports and so far, awards season is no different. Since there were so few games played before the coronavirus pandemic closed schools across the state, the Alabama Sports Writers Association opted not to vote on All-State teams this year. However, AL.com has compiled a list of 20 of the top players in each classification for baseball and softball. The nominations were voted on by coaches around the state and the AL.com staff.

Among the selections were several local standouts including Cullman's Nick Braswell, Hanceville's Zach Campbell, West Point's Aubry Cleghorn and West Point's Molly Pendley.

'It was our day': Reflections on Auburn baseball's 2019 Super Regional title

Jeff Shearer
AU Athletics

AUBURN, Ala. – By the time Tanner Burns delivered his first pitch in game three of the 2019 Chapel Hill Super Regional, nearly an hour had elapsed since Auburn's starting pitcher had warmed up, a circumstance usually reserved for a rain delay.

Despite a forecast that suggested otherwise, there was no rain in North Carolina on that memorable Monday morning, but there was plenty of thunder and lightning.

Thunder in the form of 18 Auburn hits, lightning in the shape of a 13-run first inning that carried the Tigers to a 14-7 victory, sending Auburn to the College World Series for the first time since 1997.

"We had been there so often," said Auburn coach Butch Thompson, looking back a year later. "I thought it was our day. I woke up thankful. The guys were in a good place. They had been so hungry. I just knew that door was barely hanging on and they didn't waste any time running through it.

"I did tell them that this has been a journey for us. This has been a slow build with a lot of heartache, setbacks and daggers to end seasons.

"The first thought I had was how thankful I was that these coaches and players had worked so hard over a calendar year to get back to a game three of a Super Regional."

Auburn nearly batted around twice in the top of the first inning against four North Carolina pitchers, sending 17 batters to the plate and logging nine hits in a half-inning that lasted 49 minutes, the second-most prolific inning in NCAA Tournament history.

The Tigers led off the game with four straight walks, to Judd Ward, Ryan Bliss, Conor Davis and Steven Williams, which forced in Ward for a 1-0 lead and ended the outing for North Carolina's starting pitcher.

"Once he walked the first guy it was pretty easy – we've got to make this guy throw strikes before we ever take the bat off our shoulder again," said assistant coach Gabe Gross, managing the offense from the third base coach's box.

"There were a lot of takes given, it was not a hard decision to make."

With a new pitcher came a more aggressive mindset. RBI singles by Edouard Julien, Will Holland and Kason Howell made it 5-0. Ward, batting for the second time in the inning, belted a three-run home run that made it 8-0.

An error, and RBI singles from Rankin Woley, Julien and Matt Scheffler accounted for a seemingly insurmountable 13-0 advantage.

"It wound up being a microcosm of so many different things that I believe in as hitters," Gross said.

"You had a big home run by Judd Ward. You had a ton of two-strike hits using the middle and the other way. You had a safety squeeze thrown in the middle of that.

"You had a lot of really good baseball and the discipline to sit there and let that guy walk you around the bases and not be overaggressive. Like the N.C. State Regional the year before, it was just kind of an avalanche where those guys were so hungry for it."

After completing SEC play with a 14-16 conference record, not many outside Plainsman Park expected Auburn to contend for Omaha.

"Some of the teams that do things that are unprecedented or have great finishes don't always have smooth sailing all year," said assistant coach Karl Nonemaker, recalling Thompson's talking point as the Tigers embarked on the postseason.

"That message resonated with the players. It certainly resonated with me. We survived the season, we survived one of the toughest schedules in the country, and we're ready to see what happens now. We've earned this opportunity to have a shot."

There were still 27 outs to record. Burns, on a pitch count, blanked the Tar Heels for two innings.

Richard Fitts earned the victory, pitching 5.1 innings. Cody Greenhill recorded the final five outs.

Woley, playing first base, caught a sharply hit ball for the last out, presenting the baseball to Thompson for a keepsake. Most of North Carolina's fans had long since departed from a game that lasted 3 hours and 36 minutes, leaving Auburn's supporters to savor this moment with their team.

"I remember looking up and seeing the joy at the end of that game, how much orange and blue is in the stands," Thompson said.

"All that's left there in North Carolina is our people. That adds to the moment. If they're not there, it doesn't have the same richness to it. Seeing the looks on people's faces, seeing people there with us and for us.

"It's that connection with our fans and people that love Auburn that enriches it.

"Knowing that the Auburn family and those fans, when we look up and see them there, it makes it pretty special."

Team (from Front)

W.C. Mann
craig@cullmantribune.com

CULLMAN, Ala. – WellStone, provider of mental health services to Cullman and Madison Counties, sent notification to The Tribune on Monday that "a Mobile Crisis Team will officially be added to WellStone Cullman's program list. An initiative led by Senator Garlan Gudger, the two-person team is available 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, 365 days a year to respond to Cullman County residents in a mental health or substance use crisis. The team primarily focuses on individuals 18 and over who experience a behavioral health crisis in Cullman County. The goal of this new resource is to assess needs, then resolve the immediate crisis through direct intervention or find the best fit resources to successfully resolve the crisis."

According to Wellstone's release, "The team responds to crisis where it happens, which can often reduce or avoid emergency room utilization or arrests. Then, the team can identify where the individual needs to go next; whether that is outpatient treatment or another community-based service."

Wellstone Chief Operational Officer Chris Van Dyke talked to The Tribune Monday afternoon about the Mobile Crisis Team:

"It's a two-person team on each shift- that is 24/7- and they will be responding to crisis in the community as dispatched by either our staff, or we want them to respond to law enforcement- to certain situations, not every situation, but certain situations.

"When people are leaving the ER, the Mobile Crisis Team can go home with them, make sure their home environment's settled, for example, if someone was suicidal, they could go home with them and make sure everything was going to be settled. They could come back the next day, pick them up and bring them in to their appointment here.

"The whole idea is to follow the crisis from that first call until it's handed off to the provider who's going to really treat them, and making sure we're following those cases through that period, whether that's two hours or three days."

Van Dyke shared the goals of the program, which include:

- Decrease the suicide rate
- Decrease recidivism of mental health cases at emergency rooms
- Decrease recidivism of mental health cases requiring law enforcement intervention

The Mobile Crisis Team project is a state-funded pilot program currently offered in only five counties, though WellStone staffers hope that theirs might become a pattern for similar programs statewide.

When will it start?

Van Dyke said, "We are hiring now, so as soon as we can fill the positions, we'll be starting. We are looking for master's level clinicians, preferably licensed, but they don't have to be licensed. The second member is either a peer, someone with a lived experience with mental illness or addiction, who's willing to be certified as a certified peer specialist, or a bachelor's level case manager, someone with a bachelor's degree in a human services field. We can get them trained and certified as a case manager."

Job descriptions and application information are available on WellStone's website www.wellstone.com and www.indeed.com.

Legislative support a key ingredient

The project came to Cullman County because of efforts led by Sen. Garlan Gudger, R-Cullman with support in the Alabama House of Representatives from Rep. Randall Shedd, R-Fairview, Rep. Scott Stadthagen, R-Hartselle and others.

According to the WellStone release, "A significant amount of the development success is the initiative of Senator Garlan Gudger. Mental health is a platform that he has ran on since his days in Cullman's City Council, and he continues to prove that he will not stop being an advocate at the state level for funding mental health. Senate members along with Gudger, like Senator Steve Livingston and Senator Greg Albritton are collaborating to champion this cause in the Senate.

"In the House, the mental health cause was championed by majority leader Nathaniel Ledbetter, which created a task force for the State. Members of the task force included Livingston, Albritton and Cullman's Representative Randall Shedd and Representative Scott Stadthagen, who carried legislation for the House.

"Last year, Representative Shedd and Senator Gudger won the 'Legislators of the Year' award for the House and for the Senate from the National Alliance on Mental Illness (NAMI) Alabama.

"Having a local delegation that sees mental health as a priority is substantial, especially when representing Cullman County at a state level.

"When asked about the funding Gudger stated, 'I am just doing my job. There has been and continues to be an immediate need to keep mental health patients out of our jails and out of our hospitals that by not doing so, only wastes taxpayer's dollars. Plus, the safety of all Cullman County citizens is a large concern to me, as I ran my campaign on that promise. Being able to provide extra funding for a Mobile Crisis Team that will be available 24/7 to accomplish those goals is a good start to giving our citizens, family members and friends a resource to use when needed.'"

Monday afternoon, Gudger told The Tribune, "I surveyed on social media the biggest concerns of my district before this year's state legislative session. Mental health consistently stayed at the top of everyone's priority. So this session I wanted to focus on funding for a program that helps us all though public safety and efficiently using our tax dollars wisely.

"Mental health is a topic that affects us all. I said that I would be an advocate for the families, the patients, the citizens that are affected by dozens of Mental Health patients continuously going to the hospital ER and the county jail. This program, that I was able to get funded, will be the first mobile unit crisis team in the state to assist patients 24/7/365. This is just the start to our work as your local delegation to ensure the best for our citizens."

Joy for a job well done! Left to right are Brian Reed, Jennifer Reed with Tiger, arborist Normer Adams and Kylie Fitzgerald. Is Tiger thinking, "Whoa, I was up there?" or is he planning his next adventure?

'Cat Man Do' to the rescue!

Georgia arborist retrieves stranded family pet from way up a Vinemont tree

W.C. Mann
craig@cullmantribune.com

W.C. MANN/THE CULLMAN TRIBUNE

As Adams nears the top, Tiger (among the leaves near the top) enjoys the view one more time.

VINEMONT, Ala. – On Friday afternoon, a long ordeal came to a joyful conclusion when Tiger the cat was rescued from the top of a tall, tall pine near Vinemont, two weeks to the day from his climb up the tree. Exploring the environs of the country home to which his family recently moved, Tiger found himself up a tree that lacked a down elevator. There, the treetop tabby endured multiple storms that provided his drinking water; owners Brian and Jennifer Reed speculated that he may have visited birds' nests for food.

Then along came Cat Man Do, aka Normer Adams, a 70-year-old (You would never guess his age by watching him climb!) arborist who took up tree climbing seven years ago after retiring from his career as an advocate for at-risk children and director of the Georgia Association of Homes and Services for Children.

Wife Pamela Adams shared, "When he retired, he joined a tree-climbing club and learned to climb and do knots.

"Once he did all that, you know, once you've been in a tree, what are you going to do once you're in there? He enjoys it; it's fun, it's a hobby and he helps people."

Once he gained the skill set and gear collection needed, Adams started Cat Man Do Rescue, offering his services to fetch cats and drones from trees.

He does the work free of charge, though he encourages those who want to pay to make a donation to one of his favorite charities like https://bloomouryouth.org, https://christiancity.org or http://graceforall.us.

Tiger was Adams' 479th cat rescue.

Cat rescuers and rescue groups are not that uncommon. Cats are adept at climbing up, but they like to see where they are going, and their claws and paws are not geared toward descending trees headfirst.

For that reason, they often have a tough time getting down when they climb higher up than they can jump down.

Most times, a cat left alone will figure out a way down, but every so often, a kitty like Tiger just finds himself stuck and in need of help.

As he watched Adams prepare to climb, cat day Brian Reed remarked, "There's a special place in Heaven for people like him."

After Tiger made it back to the ground floor, Reed shared, "I can't say enough about Cat Man Do. He's awesome! Nobody else come to help us, and he came to the rescue. I really appreciate it.

To Adams, he said, "You're a godsend."

Tiger was a lot skinnier than when he went up the tree, but his best human friend Kylie Fitzgerald, daughter of the Reeds, took him for a Pedialyte treat. He will visit the veterinarian for a checkup, and the Reeds said he will now be an indoor cat, at least for a while.

Literacy (from Front)

this'll end up sponsoring those literacy programs for the rest of the year into next year."

The Link's Director Julie Hall told The Tribune during a rainy lunch break, "We're really excited! We had a great flight this morning; had a couple of teams that went out this morning, and they did well and had a good time. We can't wait for the second bunch to get kicked off."

Hall took a moment to brag on her event staff, sharing, "We have had such a great turnout for volunteers. We've got Miss Wallace State here, we have some of our OTA students here volunteering, we have our work study students here working with us, so we really have a lot of support today.

"We have longtime volunteers- a couple of those- and we have some of our board members here, so we're really excited that everybody showed out to support this event."

Rumors Deli was an event sponsor, providing meals for golfers and volunteers through funding provided by Dr. Ginger Holt. Deli owner Annette Harris even fielded a team, taking to the course for the first time herself. While her performance did not qualify her for the pro tour, she still had good things to say.

According to Harris, "It was great! I learned a lot of golf terms: 'Mulligan'- I learned that, I learned 'slice,' 'divot.' I've never set foot on a golf course before today. John Daly: I learned about that guy the first nine, actually.

"We played the John Daly method! I had a little move that I invented today, called the Jesus ball, where my ball walked on water and hit the green! But no, we had a lot of fun . . . We had a fun team. It started raining on us a little bit, but it was really a good time, and it was about raising money for The Link."

Harris said that she would like to do it again.

Hearing about what the money does

Nancy McKenzie teaches adult literacy for The Link, in one of the programs funded by the tournament. She said that, through the work she does, "I've seen a confidence, that they realize that if they learn to read better, their life will be better."

Yvonne Krenkel teaches a free kindergarten readiness program every summer, and shared, "We see children that can't even hold their pencil and don't know their colors or anything, don't know how to stand in a straight line. And just in two weeks' time, it's a transformation of holding your pencil, knowing things, knowing how to stand in a line and be quiet."

Trae Norrell, chairman of The Link's board, talked about The Link:

"As a pastor and someone just living in this community, I was definitely drawn by the mission of this organization, meeting people exactly where they are, fighting poverty. And really, what our mission is about is meeting people where they are and showing them something larger than themselves. For me, what brought me here was really just the people, from an organizational standpoint, but also from the people- our neighbors- that we have the opportunity to serve. That, really, is the overall reach of what The Link does, and what draws me."

Evangelism, part 6

Tom Fillinger
Tribune Columnist

Today we continue our focus on Reformation & Renewal. Our focus is Evangelism: what does and what does not meet the NT criteria for effective evangelism?

In the midst of the virus lockdown, evangelism remains a priority for every Christian. The methods utilized may differ, but the privilege and responsibility remain. Technology offers a host of tools to reach people with the message that Jesus Saves!

The primary focus of preaching is foundational for effective evangelism. The pulpit and the messages preached from that pulpit shape the ministry of evangelism.

True evangelism is focused on making disciples fully formed in the image of Christ. They reflect his character and conduct. We must make disciples, not just "converts."

Understanding the nature of scripture is an essential requirement for preachers who wish to expound what the biblical text says. Many assert that the primary emphasis of the Bible is redemptive history, which culminates in Christ's person and work. Since the Bible focuses upon Christ's redemptive work, this should have practical implications for expositors who strive to proclaim the Bible accurately. Those who challenge the unity of the Bible and its Christocentric emphasis must give an answer to several biblical texts that demonstrate this idea.

Consider the following texts:

• (Jesus said,) "You search the Scriptures because you think that in them you have eternal life; and it is they that bear witness about me." (John 5:39)

• (Jesus said,) "If you believed Moses, you would believe me; for he wrote of me." (John 5:46)

• "And beginning with Moses and all the Prophets, he (Jesus) interpreted to them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." (Luke 24:27)

• "Then he (Jesus) said to them, "These are my words that I spoke to you while I was still with you, that everything written about me in the Law of Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms must be fulfilled." Then he opened their minds to understand the Scriptures..." (Luke 24:44-45)

While preachers should not jump to unwarranted connections to Jesus, they should not overlook or ignore what seemed to be very clear either — that the Old Testament writers were pointing to the Messiah. Christopher J. H. Wright says, "The Old Testament tells the story which Jesus completes."

Simply put, the person and work of Christ is the main message of the Bible. Recent homileticians have looked to Paul as a model for the necessity of preaching Christ. "Paul centered on Jesus, claiming to the Corinthians that he had 'determined not to know anything among you except Jesus Christ and Him crucified' (1 Cor. 2:2)."

OPINION

Op-Ed: Putting the ax to the root

Tom Fillinger
Tribune Columnist

The USA is literally on fire. Absolute truth. Our nation is in the grip of riots and violence because we are no longer a "nation governed by law." Anarchy and antinomianism rule the day. There is no sense of truth absolute so there is no basis for law. The church is largely impotent, and when she does speak, her voice is mocked and ignored. Permit me to engage in a brief historical review of social policy in the USA beginning in 1963 that brings us to this dreadful chaos.

• 1963 – Madelyn Murray O'Hara launched an initiative to remove prayer from our schools.

• 1973 – The Supreme Court determined that abortion was an acceptable practice – 63 million image bearers have been slaughtered since that fateful decision and funded by the taxpayers.

• 2004 – The nation accepted as "normal" homosexual "marriage."

Every one of these social policy practices are in direct and glaring violation of absolute truth as provided with unclouded precision in God's word. How is this possible? Biblical literacy is at an all-time low. People profess to be "Christian," but their conduct denies their profession. George Barna's research concludes that a mere 6% of professing Christians exhibit a worldview and a lifestyle that supports with integrity that claim.

The church was effectively silent in response to each of these policy decisions. In the words of Judge Bork, as a nation we were "galloping to Gomorrah!" So pervasive were these trends that "getting Borked" is now a recognized term that describes anyone who stands in opposition to our nation's reckless and unrelenting abandon of our heritage and any credible adherence to the "Faith Once for all Delivered to the Saints" (Jude 3).

The local church was content to let a few para-church organizations carry the banner in resistance to these reprobate policies and spiritual decay. They were just focused on numbers and personal comfort. The SBC claims 15 million members, yet a mere 6 million attend each Lord's Day. Why? Because those other 9 million "members" are "Cultural Christians," on the roll as members but not redeemed. They are focused on their "comfort zone." Dietrich Bonhoeffer, in "The Cost of Discipleship," labels this Cheap Grace. Indeed! When Jesus Christ calls a person, He calls them to "come and die,"- Die to personal comfort and self-serving indulgence. Jesus provides a vivid profile of a true disciple in Luke 14:25-35. Read this passage. Are you a true disciple or simply a church member?

There are many causal factors (social, political, economic) that have brought us as a nation to this abysmal state. I assign as the primary causal factor for the current chaos the impotence, open defiance and disobedience to God's commands by the professing church.

Jeremiah 5:30–31 "An appalling and horrible thing has happened in the land: the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests rule as the prophets direct; my people love to have it so, but what will you do when the end comes?"

So, what is the solution? There is no quick fix. There is, however, a way forward that is validated by the history of the church. That way is intercessory prayer. This is costly. This demands a passion to see God hear and answer our desperate cry for reformation and renewal. Anyone who desires to participate in such an endeavor may contact me. Send me an email at iustransforms@gmail.com or call 803-413-3509 and leave me a voice mail. I will return your call.

Cullman arts fans enjoy 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' with Cullman Civic Ballet

W.C. Mann

CULLMAN, Ala. – The recently formed Cullman Civic Ballet (CCB), under the direction of Brooke Desnoes and with the help of Cullman Parks, Recreation & Sports Tourism (CPRST), gave its first performance Saturday evening at Heritage Park. Both organizations were pleased with the crowd that turned out on a warm early summer evening for CCB's adaptation of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

CCB described its take on the classic play:
"Our adaptation of William Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream strips the literary original of extraneous characters and plot, focusing exclusively on Titania's bower. The action of the single act is set in a moonlit forest, one Midsummer Eve. Puck has in his possession the flower pierced by Cupid's arrow, which when sprinkled on a person causes them to fall asleep and to fall in love with the first creature he or she sees upon waking. Puck cast the flower's spell over an unknowing Titania who ends up falling in love with the rustic weaver Bottom, whom the mischievous Puck has already turned into a Donkey. In the end Puck puts order into the disorder and sweeps away the remnants of the night's doings. Sylph-like fairies twinkle in the night and reclaim the forest.

Before the show, CPRST Executive Director Zac Wood told The Tribune, "It's really exciting. There's a lot of people here, a lot of folks. (It's) a nice June evening to see the kids perform 'A Midsummer Night's Dream.' I think it's really cool- a little culture."

Wood said he had hoped to hold the performance at Art Park on Main Avenue, but the venue is still undergoing renovation. He said Art Park will host events like this in the future, and he looks forward to seeing more of CCB.

CPRST's Kelly Pulliam added, "The girls have rehearsed a little bit on the stage this afternoon, and they've got their costumes on, and makeup, and they all look adorable. We're all excited; we're very excited!"

Desnoes, whose own dream was coming true as she watched her students prepare to take the stage after two months of COVID-19 delays, told The Tribune about the dancers, "I think they're super excited, but they're such a nice group of kids, and they really know what they're doing.

"I think as long as they know what they're doing- of course, they're always going to have butterflies in their stomachs- but they really know what they're doing up there, so they're ready to go out there and do it.

"They're a group of kids who really came together to perform, so that means they must really like to perform. I mean they didn't have to do this, so I think they're really performers."

The performance went smoothly and drew an enthusiastic response from the audience.

Noted local artist and arts supporter Ben South attended and reflected afterward on the whole experience: "I thought it was sumptuous, is one word; like you looked out at what the parks did with this vista that we're surrounded by, looking out at.

"The costumes were beautiful; the girls were so disciplined and elegant in their dance. You know, it was everything you'd want in a ballet.

"This was a hot night; I think when we got out here, it was still in the upper 80s maybe, but the shade was cooling, the show was only about 35 minutes- I think is what the ballet was tonight, something like that- and it was just beautiful. It was a good crowd, but I'm sorry there weren't more people here, because it's something I'll remember forever.

"It was a wonderful moment for Cullman arts. It was the best summer thing I think I've ever been to with Cullman arts. It was great."

After she got a chance to catch her breath at the end of the performance, Desnoes shared, "I always think they do a great job. You know, when you perform, you're always excited. You always have a tendency to go faster or slower; all of your bad habits come out when you perform. As a professional, that's difficult. But as a pre-professional, that's a huge accomplishment when they get all the way through it all and look so graceful, and still enjoy it. The biggest point is they're up there to enjoy it. It's a learning experience. Every time they do it, they'll get better at it. This was the first time they did it together; it was pretty good! It was pretty good, so I'm super happy!"
