MORE THAN MEETS THE EYE

The Man Cave Market is a nursery, and so much more

CHRISTY PERRY/THE CULLMAN TRIBUNE

At The Man Cave Market in Vinemont, you can learn about orchids while listening to Santana or perhaps brush up on your Galaga skills. It's a relaxing place to hang out with old friends or make new ones over a game of pool or darts while rocking to Jimi Hendrix.

Christy Perry
christy@cullmantribune.com

VINEMONT, Ala. – For years, twin brothers Pat and Chris Thompson would kick back after a long day making flower deliveries to florists around Alabama, crack open beers and share their ideas and dreams with each other. Like so many small business owners, the brothers had to make adjustments and think outside the box to make ends meet thanks to the COVID-19 pandemic. For the Thompsons, it was the kick in the pants they needed to stop talking about their ideas and put them in motion. Now, The Man Cave Market is open for business.

From the outside, The Man Cave Market might just look like a nursery, but when you enter the doors, you feel transported. It's a beautiful place with a feeling of peace and good vibes- a place where you can learn about orchids while listening to Santana or perhaps brush up on your Galaga skills. It's a relaxing place to hang out with old friends or make new ones over a game of pool or darts while rocking to Jimi Hendrix.

Where is this utopia? South Vinemont.

"When the pandemic hit, it shut 85% of our florists down," said Pat. "We were sitting here at the bar thinking, 'What are we going to do?' We built this for parties and we have a ping pong table and pool table, we've got cornhole, we got a sound system over here you can hook a band up to or karaoke. We just had little parties before the pandemic hit and then, when it happened, we had to do something. So, we opened up to the public and didn't advertise or anything, but the word started spreading."

Pat and Chris describe themselves as "old hippies." When walking up to The Man Cave Market, customers are greeted with the sounds of classic rock- and surrounded by beautiful plants and flowers.

Pat said, "We are growing as we speak. Right now, I'm trying to find vendors to get products, and it's hard to find everything we want. We are going to be unique and eclectic."

CULLMAN, Ala. – Northbrook Baptist Church (NBC) invites the community out to the ballfield behind the church Friday evening for its free family movie night event. The church is located at 3691 Alabama Highway 157, Cullman, AL 35058.

"We will be showing 'Toy Story 4' on the ballfield behind our church," said NBC Children's Ministry Pastor Erica Turner. "Everyone is asked to bring their own chairs or blankets to sit on. The field will open at 7:30 p.m. for seating and the movie will start at 8 p.m. We will be serving free popcorn and drinks. Everyone is welcome, regardless of age."

When asked about COVID-19 concerns, she answered, "Social distancing will be encouraged. Masks are not required since the event is outside and the field is large, so social distancing should not be an issue. We encourage everyone to stay at least 6 feet apart from other families."

Turner smiled, "We love our community and want to provide a fun, outdoor event for everyone during this time when so many other activities have been canceled."

CORRECTION

In the article printed Tuesday, June 16, 2020 titled "'We're planning to keep on growing': Easy Pickens Antique Market," The Tribune stated that Molly and David Bradley, new owners of the business Easy Pickens Antique Market, own the building. They lease the building. Easy Pickens Antique Market opened its doors in November 2011, not May 26, 2012. We regret the errors.

West Point's Cleghorn earns 2nd invitation to ALABCA All-Star Event

Nick Griffin
nick@cullmantribune.com

WEST POINT, Ala. – For the second straight season, West Point standout Aubry Cleghorn has earned an invitation the annual Alabama Baseball Coaches Association All-Star Event. The 21st edition of the event will be held at Troy University July 7-10 and the top rising juniors and seniors in the state will be competing.

Cleghorn was already on his way to another stellar season before the coronavirus pandemic cut the school year short but Warriors Head Coach Drew Bryson is excited to see one of his best players and best kids get this recognition now.

"As a player, being selected to the ALABCA All-Star Event at Troy is a huge honor. It's an opportunity to showcase your talent in front of a lot of collegiate coaches, as well as compete with some of the best players around the state.

"As a coach and as a program, we are extremely happy for Aubry and excited he is getting the opportunity to represent not just himself, but our baseball program as well," Bryson said.

"He's a hard worker and a great teammate. He's a guy who has really bought in and invested himself over the last couple of years to make himself into the player he is today.

"He's one of our leaders in the program that has performed at a high level the last two seasons for us, and I know he'll continue to have success.

"Being selected a second consecutive year is a testament to not only his ability as a player, but his work ethic and his character on and off the field."

Cleghorn has been a force on the mound for West Point for a couple of years now and he's putting most of his offseason time and effort into that part of his game.

"I'm focusing the most on my velocity. I'm trying to get up to into the 90-91 range," Cleghorn said.

"I'm really striving hard to get up to that big number and that's what I'm going to focus on this offseason."

This will be Aubry's second time at the ALABCA event and he understands the opportunity that comes with the invitation.

There are a lot of eyes looking for talent at this event and Cleghorn is excited to see how he holds up with some of the best players in the state but he's also just happy to be back on the mound after his junior season was cut short.

"You're down there with the best of the best baseball players and athletes in the state.

"You get to go down there and compete and see where you are and its really a great accomplishment to get to go down there because you've got a lot of colleges looking at you with scouts there and it's just amazing to get to go down there," Cleghorn said.

"I'm very excited. I missed it and I'm glad to be back playing and get to get on the mound again and play some baseball."

Auburn's Ryan Watson signs with Baltimore

George Nunnelley

AUBURN, Ala. – Auburn right-hander Ryan Watson signed a free agent contract with the Baltimore Orioles Sunday night.

Watson becomes the third member of the 2020 team to pursue his goal of playing professional baseball, joining Tanner Burns and Bailey Horn, who were drafted last week.

"Playing for this University has been a dream come true," Watson said.

"I dreamed of playing for Auburn as a little kid and will cherish every moment of the last four years.

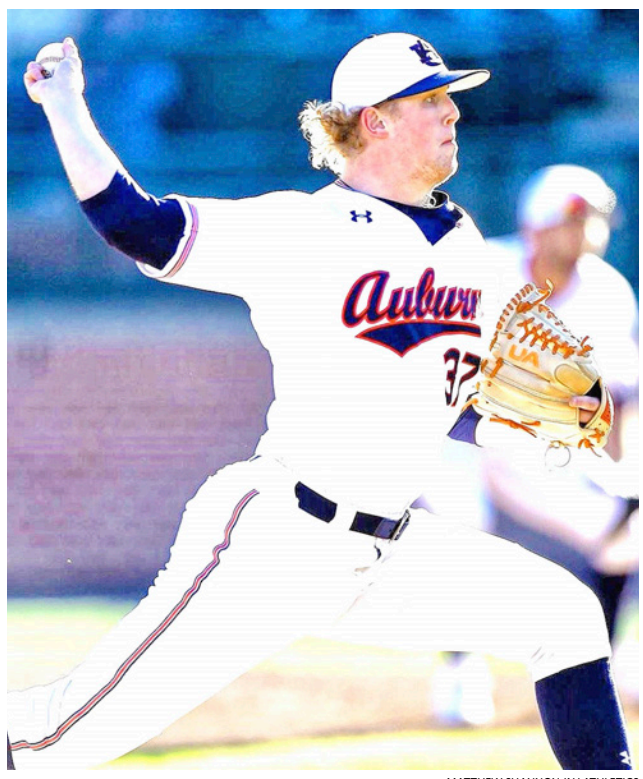

"Thank you to all the coaches, family, friends and teammates who have helped me get to this point in my baseball career.

"I'm excited to join the Baltimore Orioles organization and start this next chapter in my life." A local product from Auburn High School, Watson made 58 appearances, including five starts, in his four-year career on The Plains. He posted a 2-2 record and 4.67 ERA while striking out 79 batters and issuing 35 walks in 90.2 innings pitched.

"The entire Auburn Family joins in celebrating the career of Ryan Watson and his opportunity with the Baltimore Orioles," head coach Butch Thompson said.

"We thank Ryan for staying home to accomplish his goals of playing for Auburn and pursuing his degree before taking this next step into professional baseball."

Watson saved his best for last, playing a key role in Auburn's 2019 postseason run that culminated at the College World Series for the first time since 1997. He picked up where he left off as he allowed just one run in five appearances and 7.1 innings of work in 2020.

CULLMAN, Ala. – Life has recently become far more difficult for law enforcement officers across the country, as protest groups call for police agencies to be defunded and even dismantled, and political leaders in certain places have supported the movement. Some groups have called for the outright abolition of law enforcement agencies, while others have called for agencies to remain largely intact- though scaled back- while a certain amount of their funding is redistributed to other community entities like mental health and social services.

In Cullman County last week, a new group appeared, calling itself the "Committee for a Better Cullman." The group, which defines itself as "a collaborative action committee of Democratic Socialists of America - Birmingham and Party for Socialism and Liberation - Birmingham," says on its Facebook page, "We stand firm on the ideas of anti-racism, police abolition, anti-capitalism and socialism."

The group is decidedly anti-police, prohibiting its Facebook group members from "police sympathizing," and saying, "The instituion (sic.) of policing is rooted in, and perpetuates, the systems of white supremacy and capitalism.

"Our immediate goal is to defund all local police departments. No support of police will be tolerated in this group."

The group has planned a "Juneteenth" celebration (a historical African-American observance marking the emancipation of the last slaves at the end of the Civil War) for this Saturday afternoon at Veterans Park in Hanceville.

A "Back the Blue" rally has been announced for roughly the same time period in front of Billy Bob's Fireworks Super Store in Good Hope.

As those opposed to law enforcement attempt to gain a foothold in Cullman County, The Tribune talked to Cullman County Sheriff Matt Gentry and Cullman Police Chief Kenny Culpepper about the ongoing controversy, and got their thoughts on the movement to defund law enforcement agencies.

Sheriff Gentry
Sheriff Gentry was straightforward in his opposition to the movement, saying, "The 'Defund the Police' agenda is being driven by out-of-touch extreme left wing groups that have no idea what it's like to walk in the shoes of a deputy sheriff or a police officer trying to keep people safe every day and night.

"If that agenda happens, then you lose the front line of defense between the criminals and the law-abiding citizens. If there is no law, we as a nation will fail.

"I know that the overwhelming vast majority of law enforcement officers are honorable men and women, I have served with many during my 20 years in law enforcement, that go to work every day to make life better for the citizens where they work, and specifically the law enforcement officers here in Cullman County."

The Cullman County Sheriff's Office has a reputation for community engagement, bringing deputies and civilians together through programs like the Citizens' Academy, firearm safety classes, special needs track and field day and special needs mini rodeo, and even cooks for community events at its own expense.

Said Gentry, "We are very proud to live in the greatest community in the state of Alabama.

"It is important as law enforcement to be engrossed with the community to build relationships and partnerships.

"If we, as law enforcement, work with a community, then it brings strength and stability for a community."

Of police defunding, he added, "I can't imagine this movement would ever gain traction in Alabama or Cullman County.

"We will continue to make sure Cullman County is the safest county to live in and continue to have the best and most qualified deputies at the Cullman County Sheriff's Office."

The sheriff has spoken many times about the dangers of forcing law enforcement to be the front line of mental health crisis services, but he was not prepared to offer an endorsement of sharing sheriff's office funds, saying, "I would have to see what they do with the money, really, first."

Chief Culpepper
Chief Culpepper took a measured look at both sides of the issue, but cautioned, "Well, you know, when you say 'defunding' or 'police reform,' those are broad categories and the details are what's important. What is the specific plan?

"Just from my perspective, you know, I've been in law enforcement 42 years, and over that time span, I've seen more and more be given to the police to do because the other agencies that should be doing it haven't been funded properly.

"Mental health is a real good example; the mental health system has not been funded properly. Well, it falls to the police to handle it in a lot of cases when they get pushed back into the community, they go off their medication and we have to deal with it, at least initially.

"The biggest facility that houses the mentally ill in the state of Alabama is the prison system, the jail system, the law enforcement system, criminal justice system.

"So that has basically been given to law enforcement to handle, because mental health has not been properly funded.

"Drug abuse, the drug problem: we become the de facto caretakers for the people who have those issues, because we get called to the scene.

"You can say the same thing for domestic violence and just on and on and on. These issues where the agencies have not been funded to be able to respond to them, and so it's given to the police.

"The reason is because it's cheaper to do it that way, and we don't want to fund it.

"The police can do it cheaper, because, you know, 'Let's just let the police handle it.'

"So if you told me that you were going to properly fund all of those different agencies- social workers and mental health experts and drug addiction experts- to go in and take care of these problems, I would be for it, and every police officer I know would be for it, and we would be willing to give up some of our budget to do that.

"The problem is we're doing it on the cheap, we're handling these problems on the cheap, so to speak, because they kind of fell to us, and you're never going to be able to make enough money off of our budget to properly fund that. They need to be funded separately."

A jack of all trades: recruiting and training capable police officers
Culpepper talked about how police officers deal with so many issues today that, historically, were not part of their regular jobs, saying, "It's a constant learning process.

"You know, I teach at the police academy, and have done so for 30-something years, and one of the things that I tell the officers is that you have to be a jack of all trades, because when you go out on that call, it may be an autistic person that you're dealing with- an autistic child or an autistic young person. 'Well, do you know the difference? How do you respond to that?' You need training in that.

'Or is it someone who's intoxicated, or is it someone who's having a diabetic incident? There's so many different variables in what you're having to deal with day to day, that you're having to make judgment calls on.

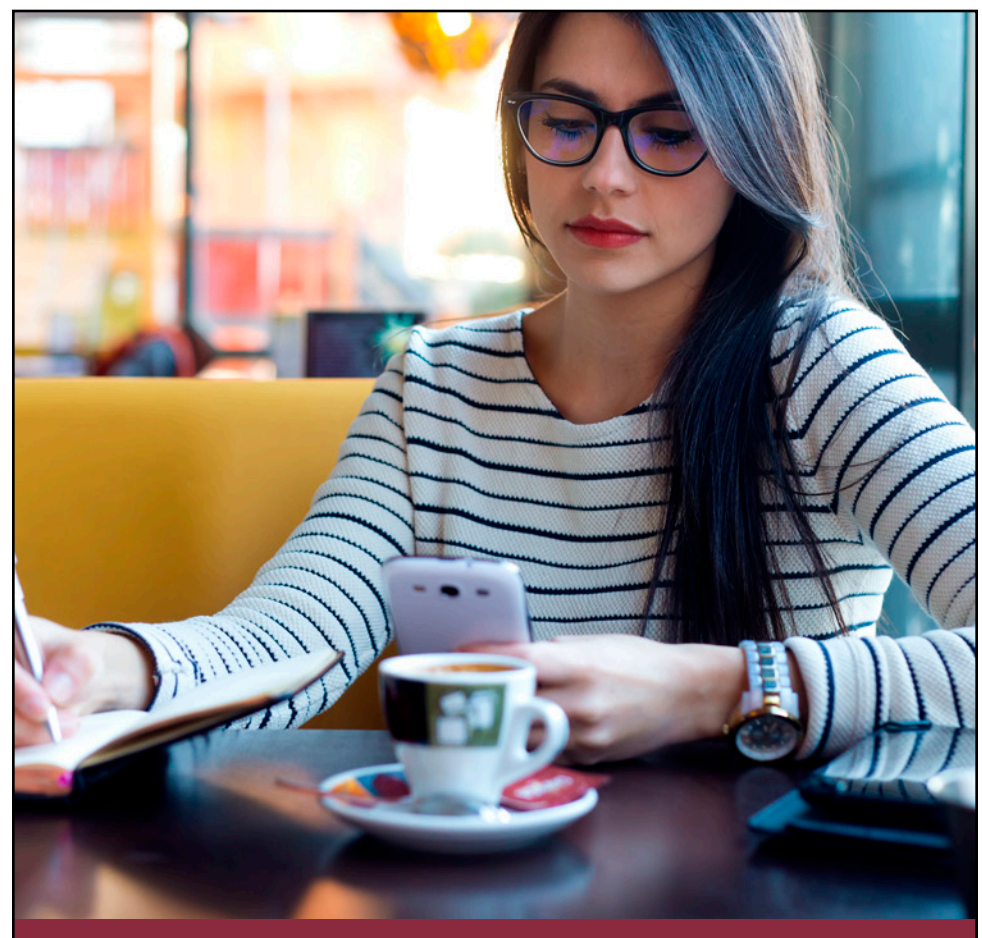

"You try to get as much training for everybody as you can, for all the different situations, but it's impossible because there's so many different variables.

"I think that's one reason that you've got, when you recruit, you want to try to recruit people who have a lot of common sense and who can kind of figure things out, because it's not always going to be cut and dried, in the book where it says, 'This is what you've got to do,' because the situation is always going to have some variables and some flexibility built into it. You need good people. That's the bottom line."

Market (from Front)

the town of South Vinemont and part of the community by giving back to the Vinemont Schools.

Besides supplying gorgeous ferns for this year's graduation ceremony, they are collecting supplies for the schools.

"They support us, and we support them," smiled Pat. "I am all about that."

In order to transform the space into what they had envisioned, Pat and Chris had to completely gut the old building that was once a convenience store.

"We've got a long way to go. It's baby steps, and a year from now, you're going to be amazed," said Pat.

"I'm going to have a hut out here and an outdoor cooler, TVs out on the sidewalk, a great place for people to come and hang out. Get a biscuit and grab a coke and listen to music.

"I have TVs everywhere, but I have them on mute because I love music. I don't want to listen to bad news. It's all about good stuff."

The reason the brothers call the business The Man Cave is because they have filled the space with things they have collected for years.

Pat and Chris are former boxers and have an extensive collection of boxing memorabilia and equipment.

They have added arcade games that are free to play and an electronic dart board.

The walls are full of original artwork by both Pat and Chris.

Plants and produce are still the primary focus of the business, and it features fruits and vegetables from local growers.

The Man Cave Market has a little bit of everything-orchids, pitcher plants, birdhouses, grilling supplies, succulents, tie-dye shirts, carpenter bee traps, Dirt Road Gourmet meals, pizzas, homemade ice cream, take-home mac and cheese, casseroles, frozen vegetables and more.

The brothers hope to continue adding locally-made products including honey, pottery and other crafts. On weekends, the man cave will have burgers, hotdogs and barbeque sandwiches.

The Man Cave Market will also begin offering gardening classes.

Explained Chris, "We make nature gardens or bowls for florists.

"We will teach people how to do that kind of thing. They will be able to take something home with them. (It's) something exciting for people to do. There will be woodworking and maybe some air plant designs."

Pat and Chris still kick back after a hard day delivering plants and running The Man Cave Market.

They continue to exchange new ideas while enjoying cold beers.

The Man Cave Market is located at 17897 U.S. Highway 31, Cullman, Alabama 35058. It's open from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday-Saturday and 9 a.m.-3 p.m. Sundays. For more information, call 256-735-4232 or visit www.facebook.com/themancavemarket/.

She is preceded in death by her parents; her husbands Robert L. Crawford and Harold Milton Tucker; and sisters Maryann Poplawski and Carol Noga. She was and executive secretary for Sears and Roebuck Company. Her burial will be in Mt. Hope Cemetery in Crane Hill, Alabama. She is survived by several nieces, nephews and great-nieces and nephews. Please send condolences to the family at www.mossservicefh.com.

On June 16, 2020 Jacqueline "Jackie" Moore, 64, graduated from life on earth and is now living in Eternity with our Heavenly Father. Jackie was born in San Antonio, TX. She graduated from Hanceville High Class of 1974 after moving from Woodlawn High in Birmingham. She met and married the love of her life Randy "Bulldog" Moore after graduating. Jackie was preceded in death by grandparents Will and Martha Mayfield and Cecil and Bobbie Quick. She is survived by husband Randy Moore; parents Mabra Mayfield Hulsey, along with Bill (Betty) Quick; children Nikki (David) Hamner, Derek (Jessica) Moore, Shelby Taylor Moore and Dylan Jackson Moore; grandchildren Payge Moore, Derek Moore, Jr., and AJ Mitchell; and sisters Ginger (Charles) Gamble and Tammy (Ken) Harman. Jackie and Randy lived in Georgia for most of their married life where they were avid "horse folks." Jackie and Randy owned and operated the Windy Hill Quarter Horse Farm in Hahira, GA. Jackie won the 1999 Appaloosa National Championship in the yearling stallion class, which spoke to the winning environment that Randy and Jackie created as a team when they worked together. After returning to the Cullman area she began working at the Chamber of Commerce. This was one of the most enjoyable jobs of her life. She gave everything she could to ensure the Chamber was well represented in Cullman. She enjoyed more than anything on this earth her time at home with her children. Molding them, listening to them, laughing with them and loving them. It was an honor and privilege to have her love and guidance throughout her life. Her family will now spend the rest of their lives living up to her expectations and trying to fill the void left by her sudden departure. Her family will attend a private service, but a memorial service will be planned for a later date due to the current health situation in our country. In lieu of flowers, please send donations to: www.arthritis.org or donate to your local charity of choice.

Debra Ann Marlin, 56, of Falkville passed away Wednesday, June 17, 2020 at Cullman Regional. She was born Oct. 8, 1963 to Harvey James and Ramoina Garmon. She was preceded in death by her parents. Survivors include her husband Timothy L. Marlin; son Kyle Ball; and daughter Amanda (Lee) Krug.

served as the director of finance and administration.

"Those of us who worked closely with Jackie are heartbroken today and will be for a long time," said Kay Shabel, chairperson of the COC board of directors.

"On behalf of the board and all of the Chamber's members, we pray for Jackie's husband, Randy, her children, Derek and Nicki, her grandchildren, Shelby and Dillon along with Jackie's mother and sisters.

"Jackie loved her community and her chamber family, and we love her."

Moore oversaw numerous programs and projects during her time with the Chamber, but none was closer to her heart than the Youth Leadership Program.

Away from work, she loved Christmas time, the beach, beautiful flowers and horses.

"I have never worked with anyone that could outwork me-until I met Jackie Moore," said former Chamber president Leah Bolin.

"She was more than my colleague; she was my friend.

"She created a presence in the chamber that can never be filled."

Talk (from Front)

W.C. Mann
craig@cullmantribune.com

COLONY, Ala. – Colony's mayor and town council, the county's only currently-serving black elected officials, have a distinct perspective on recent events surrounding the death of George Floyd, the protests and riots that followed and life in Cullman County. The Tribune sat down with Mayor Donnis Leeth and council members Ethel Alexander and Samuel Ashford recently to talk about their thoughts, feelings and fears.

Recounting the death of George Floyd

Alexander talked about the first time she saw the video showing former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin kneeling on the neck of George Floyd:

"When I looked at (Chauvin's) face on TV- and I'm screaming at the TV, 'Get off! Stop it! Stop!' I'm at home in Alabama and I'm screaming at the TV, 'Leave him alone! Get up, he can't breathe!'

"It's showing he's talking at the time I'm looking, and it was like the Spirit of God said, 'Look at his face, look at his eyes.' The things that I seen in that man's eyes, I started crying because I knew; his eyes are saying, 'I'm killing him. I'm going to kill him.' And that's what he did. I didn't know how many minutes went by and all of that, but I know when that guy said, 'Mama,' I could hear my boys in my mind saying, 'Mama,' because they call me 'Mama.' It was like they're saying 'Mama' to me.

"And I'm thinking you could have picked me up off the floor, then, because I'm bawling like a baby. Why? Why? Why did you do that to him? What did he do? Then when it comes out he was already handcuffed- I believe he was already in a police car; I don't how he got on the ground- but however, the thing is, did it take all that for $20, a counterfeit 20-dollar bill that he did not make? Senseless. It was horrible."

About the recent protests and riots around the country

Ashford said, "I'm all about a peaceful protest, but this, what they do, you know, the people that want to do a peaceful demonstration, then you've got the thugs on the other side. They implement the dirty work, you know; they throw the first brick . . . They take it from what it's really supposed to be about: people trying to get something done, instead of creating more problems than what it is.

"I done been around a long time, from Chicago to Timbuktu, and it's the same thing. You know, it starts off peaceful, supposedly, and then you get the other fellows. They come in and they turn it out to a brawl, and more people get hurt; innocent people get hurt. The store owners ain't did nothing to nobody; they get hurt. They know when they left them closed up, a building full of stuff; come back and there ain't no windows and nothing there. And insurance don't want to give you what it's really worth, you know, and everybody take a loss, which could have been prevented if they had a peaceful sit-down instead of outrageousness."

For Ashford, the police's treatment of Floyd was clearly wrong, but he said the evil act of one person or group does not justify more evil.

Said Ashford, "They ain't right; ain't nothing right. Two wrongs don't make no right. You know what I mean?"

For Ashford, communication between the opposing sides is the key to making positive change, saying "You've got to sit there and talk, not fight."

Living with fear

While Alexander agreed on the value of nonviolent movements, she expressed frustration with the notion of simply talking, saying, "Because we've been talking for 400 years. We've been in this country for 401 years, and I remember- and I know you do; I grew up in the 60s- and I (remember) very well the inhumane treatment that has been dealt to my people, to black people, because I remember my father- he's from Alabama- and he had told stories about him seeing a lynching down in McKenzie, Alabama. And my mother, she went there to become a school teacher in McKenzie, Alabama. But when he got out of the service, they married and went north to have their family. That's why I'm a northerner, because they were fearful to raise children in a place where it would not be safe for their children.

"Also, even though he spent the years that he did, and did get wounded in World War II, when he came back to Alabama, he was not able to participate, I mean go to restaurants, you know they still had the 'back of the bus' thing going on. He was a second-class citizen, even though he put his life on the line. Not just him: my father, my grandfather and my uncles all went to World War II.

"We fought wars in this country, been in this country. I'm a genealogist; I've traced my relatives back at least 250 years that I can actually pinpoint. And in those years, all the way up to 1865, they were enslaved, and they had received a lot of mistreatment.

"And then, after '65, we still didn't do any better. There was lynchings going on, there was a lot of discrimination, a lot of racism. And then, when I grew up to be a young woman, I didn't see that. And then, as my kids came, it was back again: the lynchings, the strange way of policing black communities. It's unreal.

"I have four sons, and I worry when I get a call at 3 o'clock in the morning. You know, will I see them killed and no one cares?

"And what's really scary: just this year, in 2020, we have seen nationally three or four deaths that are horrific, where children have been killed or young adults have been killed for just sleeping, jogging, driving a car. It's just been a very horrific time for me, and I just wish our country could just, OK, let's just deal with this situation, thinking that we as a people are- that we terrorize you or you be threatened. I'm not a fearful person, but it's not in the cards that that could not happen to me, you know."

Aftermath of the death of George Floyd

Alexander continued, "So what has happened now, I think, is that this murder of George Floyd was, I think, the straw that broke the camel's back. And now, it's all over the world. They're seeing America the way it sees it, and that's the way it is. And now, we're going to have to build our confidence among our communities, among our standing in the world. How can we go to a country that we're trying to better, and tell them how to treat their people, and we're putting babies in cages on the border, we're killing black men in the street or a young black woman in the bed sleeping- 'Oh, I'm sorry; I went into the wrong house,' you know, and she received eight bullets."

A "modern-day lynching"

"This here is wearing on me, because I have a love for people," said Alexander. "If it was a white young woman or a white young man, I just would not want to see anyone have that happen. And to see a lynching on TV in the 21st century, I'm just sick. (Referring to the death of Floyd) It's a modern form of lynching to me, because I study black history, and I even went to the lynching museum in Montgomery- which I think that every American, every school, everybody needs to go to Montgomery to see this, because this is one of our heaviest sins in this country, and to learn about the lynching.

"What was lynching? You know, it was a thing to put fear in black people so they, so called, 'stay in their place.' And what is our place? The place is 'don't ask questions.' We just want to keep that fear.

"This is a tremendous time. I've been through the 60s, and I went through the 80s with the drugs in the large cities- because I am from a large city. And now, seeing this, where it's just in every city, every city. I'm just amazed. I'm from Tacoma, Washington, and the young man they showed: he was killed and a police officer put a knee on his neck. He died. Why? Why? It's hard for me. It's just a hard situation for me, just hard."

Leeth began by recounting his childhood in Colony: "I was raised in this area in Cullman County, went to Hanceville High School in 1967- got integrated first in '64; I didn't go till '67. Went to Hanceville, didn't have a problem. Somebody might have called us the N-word, but that was it, you know. You get in a little fight, and it's all over. Wasn't nobody taking up sides, the police force, the principals, or no one like that. You get in a little fight and it's over. They'd say, 'It's over. Don't do it again.'

"My grandparents raised me. They said, 'You go to school to learn. You didn't go to school to fight, act up in school.'

"Now, about the blacks getting killed and stuff like this, it's a shame, a very shame to see someone get killed like that, a knee on his neck, a couple more of his police buddies just standing there watching. That's bad. That's terrible.

"I'm going to say this: when people get on a knee, I think they're fixing to pray. But this guy, he did pray, now. He prayed to kill George Floyd . . . You know, you're praying to yourself, 'I want to kill this N;' that's what he did. They can't turn that no other way but murder.

"This guy that killed George Floyd, he should go to prison, be in there with all the bad inmates. Then you'll see how bad he is. But that ain't going to happen, because they're going to put him somewhere like in lockdown, by himself. But still, they can get to him.

"The thing is, stop that before it gets bad. It's getting bad, getting worse. Four hundred years; I think it's 400 years in about six days it's been slavery. And now, it's turning back to torture. Really, he tortured that man. 'I can't breathe, I can't breathe.' Then he talk about his mother; he still didn't stop. They still didn't intervene. That is murder, any way you want to look at it."

Leeth expressed frustration at the amount of money law enforcement associations and police unions will spend to defend officers like Chauvin, and the predominantly- or all-white juries whooften hear cases against police officers, as well as the unwritten "blue code" that often prevents law enforcement officers from exposing wrongful actions of other officers.

Said Leeth, "The law ain't like that. You're supposed to tell somebody, grab that guy by the back of his neck- the cop doing it or the sheriff doing it- pull him off, handcuff him, put him in the car; 'Now you're arrested.'"

A challenge to elected officials and voters

Alexander laid at least part of the blame for the current atmosphere of unrest on the administration of President Donald Trump, saying, "This has happened; this man was killed- nationally known- we all know it was murder. This is the point where your politicians, like you were saying, and they're going to have to say something. It's going to fall- starts at the head. Now, somebody put this man in office and he's up there. He cannot soothe the country; he will not come out to even make sense of what's going on. It's because maybe he doesn't know how to make sense of what's going on.

"And so, here you have a group of people: a man, some congressmen- Republican congressmen- that will not get on TV and say, 'This was brutal.' They don't want to talk about it. There was two Republican congresspeople that were able to say they were offended. What is it about discussing the anti-lynching bill? What is it that you have to talk about? What is that? Why can't that just be unanimous? It can't be unanimous because of the Republicans that won't agree. And I'm thinking, at this point, everybody should agree.

"This country is in a very bad place in history. It's not going to bring George back; it's not going to bring the young lady- Breona Taylor- and the young man (Ahmaud Arbery) that was killed by the three white men that thought he was some criminal. They're not coming back, but we're here. We have to live here. What does it take for us to say, 'Okay, time out?'

"This has been going on- Emmett Till died in 1951, I think it was, beat, lynched, everything. OK, that was scary when we seen his picture in the Jet magazine. Was that enough? Was that not enough? But it wasn't enough. Is George Floyd going to be enough? This is a scary time. When we have people and powers that be that can't come to the realization that black people are not going backwards, we're not ignorant, and we do have elements just like any other group of people have- people doing wrong. But that don't give anybody the power to just go up and just shoot you, and say, 'Oh, I thought you had a gun,' and all you had was a water gun. Twelve-year-old boy: water gun. (Tamir Rice, who actually had an airsoft pistol, still considered a toy) Then we just walk away from it.

"Black people are so desensitized to murder, because we've seen it for so long. Where do we go? I mean, the question is 'Why?' I'm reaching out to some of my Republican friends to ask why. 'Why would you put this man in office or want to put him back when he won't address our issues?'

"It's OK to be Republican; I don't mind that. You know, that's OK. We're all Americans before you're that, before you're independent, before you're a Democrat. You're American. I'm an American. I've been here, I know, at least 300 years- my bloodline.

"So what does it take? Because I don't see any other nationality receiving that abuse. And when I see those children put in cages, that just brought those stories I've heard about African Americans: their children could be just taken away and sold down to Mississippi, taken away and sold to South Carolina. They sold slaves here from the Colony. Where does it end?

"We have to be truthful about our history so we can get along or get on and make this country great, for real make it great. It will not be great by saying, 'Make it great again.' That's just words. We have to put these things into action."

In a county dominated by Republicans, Colony's officials are open about their commitment to the Democratic Party, as well as their dissatisfaction with Trump (and more him, specifically, than his party or administration). They said they could understand a Republican being unable to vote for Joe Biden, but requested that voters consider writing in another name besides Trump. Alexander suggested "Mickey Mouse."

Do you feel safe living in Cullman County and going to the city of Cullman?

Leeth said, "I feel safe," and later added, "I was born and raised here, joined the military, stayed (away in the service) 21 years. But I've been some places way more prejudiced than Cullman is. Cullman's like a little underdog to places I've been in, in the United States, prejudiced.

"Cullman is a place I would raise my kids. I did raise them here. I would raise them in Cullman, because I've been places where if you was black or in a minority, you couldn't talk like this, because they wouldn't let you talk; 'You be quiet. Nobody wants to know what you got to say.' But here in Cullman, you can talk; you can talk. You can talk to the news people, you can talk to the sheriff, the other people and all that stuff. They might be prejudiced, but you can talk to them, and nine times out of 10, when I go talk to somebody, I get results."

According to Leeth, speaking to anyone with respect gets better results than making demands.

Alexander responded, "I do feel safe going to Cullman. I feel safe living in the Colony. I do know that Cullman has a terrible, terrible history."

Alexander related the story of one of her sons who suffers from mental illness and has been known to call the sheriff's office during the night in fear. According to Alexander, CCSO deputies have always treated him and her with courtesy and respect.

Said Alexander, "My experience of today, dealing with Cullman Sheriff (Matt) Gentry, the county police have been positive."

She added that she has encountered occasional rude treatment while shopping in Cullman, but said, "The police here, I'm going to give them a good grade from me, my personal experience."

Ashford shared, "I was born and raised in Chicago, you know, and if you can make it in Chicago, you can make it anywhere. Every job I done had in Alabama, in Cullman, I was the only black person. They respected me, because I respected them and I know my business. When I started working at Terri Pines Country Club, I went in as a sous chef. In three weeks, I was executive chef because I knew more than the white guy. He graduated with a 2.0 across the board; I graduated with a 4.0 across the board. Things he bought from Sysco, I made. You know, it's not what you do, it's how you do it. In order to get respect, you have to give it."

Ashford, who admitted to having past run-ins with the law in Cullman County, said that law enforcement officers treated him well, even when he was on their bad side. He also added that, in those situations, he made a point not to provoke the officers who were doing their jobs.

Said Ashford, "I learned a long time ago: you're going to jail. Don't take no whoopin' along with it!"

Alexander concluded, "Most policemen are nice, most of them, I think. It's just that there's a group that just don't want change. They've been here for 400 years; they're the grandchildren, great-grandchildren, great-great-great grandchildren of somebody that has instilled that brutality in them.

"The majority of the policemen I know- I'm talking about white police officers because that's what we're dealing with- but they're pretty good. But you have an element that's making everybody look bad. I think that that element needs to be out. They need to go, because if they don't, all of us (and) all the good policemen are going to be in harm's way."

The final word

For a solution, Leeth offered, "Only way we can stop this junk from going on to the minority people, you got to register to vote and start from the White House down; if it's the president, the governors of the states, the council members, the mayors, the sheriff, the police department . . . You go vote. You get them out of there."

Alexander: "I wish, I hope and pray that we can develop a system that, if America really wants to be great again, it's not about money, stocks and all of this; it's about poor people, it's about feeding our people, it's about a lot of things that are hurting. Folks don't make the money to be able to live decently; they got to work three jobs, four jobs to try to pay $800 a month rent. It's ridiculous. Everything is way out of whack, and we're sitting here, 'Well, we're going to pray,' and that's all we can do is really pray.

"The Lord let me know we can't change the heart of man: 'I'm the only one that can change the heart of man.' You can put a law- every law- on the book, but if their heart's going to be changed, it has to be done by God. But policies and things can come in to make those that don't want to do right, do right. So that's where we're at, now."
