CULLMAN, Ala. — Sen. Garlan Gudger, R-Cullman, was injured in a jet ski accident on Smith Lake on the afternoon of July 4. He was airlifted to UAB Hospital in Birmingham and is currently in the ICU, but his prognosis is "good," according to an update from Gudger's office.

The statement said, "While at UAB, he underwent a brief surgical procedure to address internal bleeding and incurred (sic) other injuries that doctors are monitoring. The two-term senator is currently in the Intensive Care Unit following his surgery, but his physicians indicate that the prognosis for his recovery is good."

Gudger's wife, Heather Gudger, released the following statement on his behalf late Thursday night: "From the first responders who were quickly on the scene to the members of the helicopter airlift unit to the doctors and nurses at UAB and everyone else » PAGE 2

Cullman Electric Cooperative building 'birthday boxes' for local children

CULLMAN ELECTRIC COOPERATIVE

The Cullman Electric Cooperative is partnering with Cullman County DHR to provide "birthday boxes" to local children in foster care.

Cheyenne Sharp
cheyenne@cullmantribune.com

CULLMAN, Ala. — The Cullman Electric Cooperative (CEC) is teaming up with the Cullman County Department of Human Resources (DHR) to provide "birthday boxes" to as many foster children and children in care as possible through the Birthday Box Summer Giveback Program.

From Cullman County DHR Director Amy Smith, the CEC found that, on average, Cullman County has around 160 children in foster care at any given moment.

"A key part of what cooperatives do is give back to the communities they serve," said CEC Manager of Communications and Marketing Lindsey Dossey. "We saw this idea online and contacted our local DHR to see if they had anyone providing these for local foster kids. Once we discovered that there wasn't anyone doing this for our local foster kids, we decided that we wanted to work with our community to provide a birthday celebration for the foster kids of Cullman County."

According to research done by The Pew Charitable Trusts, on average, children in foster care system will spend at least two birthdays in care and many children in foster care are removed from homes that lack normal life experiences, even simple experiences such as birthday celebrations.

"When we talked about the thought of a child not having their birth celebrated, it broke our hearts and we wanted to help make sure all children got a celebration of the day they were born," smiled Dossey. "So we're making 160 birthday boxes so that each one can have one."

The birthday boxes are essentially a celebration in a box. Each box is packed full of the necessary ingredients for a party – cake, plates, banner and all.

Each contains the following items packed inside a disposable baking pan:

- A yellow or white cake mix
- A tub of icing » PAGE 10

Staff Reports
Contributor

CULLMAN COUNTY, Ala. A two-vehicle crash that occurred at approximately 8:40 a.m. Friday, July 5, claimed the life of a Scottsboro man.

Justin R. Bradford, 30, was critically injured when the 2007 Kawasaki Vulcan motorcycle he was operating struck a 1999 Ford F150 driven by Ronald K. Crumbley, 42, of Carbon Hill.

After impact, both vehicles left the roadway.

Bradford was transported to Cullman Regional, where he later succumbed to his injuries and was pronounced deceased.

The crash occurred on Alabama Highway 69 near County Road 216, in Dodge City in Cullman County.

Nothing further is available as Troopers with the Alabama Law Enforcement Agency's (ALEA) Highway Patrol Division continue to investigate.

Learn to manage wildlife conflicts at free workshop July 11

Gauge Day
gauge@cullmantribune.com

CULLMAN, Ala. – Farming often involves dealing with unwanted wildlife, which can cause significant damage to crops and livestock. To address these challenges, the Cullman County Extension Office and the North Alabama Agriplex are co-hosting the Wildlife vs. Farm Life - Military Veteran & Beginning Farmer workshop. This free event will take place on July 11, from 6-8 p.m. at the Cullman County Extension Office, located at 402 Arnold St. NE in Cullman.

The workshop is designed to equip farmers, particularly military veterans and beginners, with practical methods to manage wildlife conflicts on their farms.

"Wildlife conflict management is an expectation for most farming operations, whether it's deer in the green beans or raccoons in the chicken coop. Alabama Extension takes this as an opportunity to educate farmers about how to mitigate these challenges through biological control, deterrents and other methods," explained County Extension Coordinator Kira Sims.

Regional Extension Agent in Forestry, Wildlife and Natural Resources Norm Haley, will be the guest speaker at the workshop. Haley brings a wealth of experience in teaching the management of wildlife, providing participants with expert insights into effective strategies.

The idea for this workshop series originated from the numerous inquiries the Cullman County Extension Office receives each year about managing wildlife in gardens and farms.

"Because this is also a challenge farmers face, we decided to take our wildlife conflict program and direct it towards farms.

"The primary goal is for farmers to walk away with practical methods to manage conflict they may have with the wildlife in and around their farms. This starts by understanding why the animals are there, then determining how to discourage them from the spaces where they are not wanted," Sims explained.

This month's workshop will be held at the Cullman County Extension Office, a slight deviation from its usual location at the Agriplex.

"Hopefully participants will gain practical methods to mitigate the wildlife conflicts they experience on their farm, which should reduce losses (and stress) and create a more productive environment. Whether you grow produce or raise livestock and poultry, there will be beneficial and practical information to implement," expressed Sims.

Participants can register online for this free workshop, and a light supper will be provided. The link to register can be found on the Wildlife vs. Farm Life event page on Facebook or at https://cullmanrecreation.recdesk.com/Community/Program. It is recommended to register by July 10, to ensure food accommodations.

For any other registration or accessibility needs, contact Kira Sims at kira.sims@auburn.edu or call 256-737-9386.

Gudger (from Front)

who assisted during this accident, we offer our deepest thanks and recognition that each of them kept a difficult situation from being even worse.

"To those across the state who have reached out and lifted up our family with their prayers of mending and comfort, we feel your support and know that God holds Garlan in his healing hands.

"Everyone who knows Garlan is aware that he is a strong, tough, and energetic man who will recover from these injuries and continue serving the citizens of his district while promoting the conservative Alabama values that so many of us hold close."

On Friday, July 5, the Alabama Law Enforcement Agency released details of the incident.

According to ALEA, the incident occurred at approximately 3:15 p.m. Thursday, July 4. The agency said Gudger, 49, was injured when the 2024 Sea-Doo GTI personal watercraft (PWC) he was operating was struck in the rear by a 2019 Sea-Doo GTI PWC operated by his son, Garlan E. Gudger III, 21, of Cullman.

"The collision caused both individuals to be thrown into the water, however, both Gudger Jr., and Gudger III were wearing personal flotation devices (PFDs). Bystanders in the area assisted both individuals out of the water and transported them to a nearby dock.

"Garlan E. Gudger Jr., was evaluated by local emergency medical services personnel (EMS) and was subsequently transported via helicopter to the University of Alabama at Birmingham (UAB) Hospital for medical treatment. Garlan E. Gudger III was also evaluated by local EMS personnel but was released at the scene," said the release from ALEA.

The incident occurred in Little Crooked Creek area (also known as Rock Creek) of Smith Lake near Crane Hill in Cullman County. ALEA said the Crane Hill Volunteer Fire Department and Cullman EMS both responded to the scene and assisted with medical treatment and transport.

Also on Friday, Sen. Gudger's mother, Dot Gudger, posted an update on her son's condition to Facebook, writing:

"I just wanted to give an update on Garlan and to tell all of you thank you so much for reaching out to our family. It is wonderful to have praying Christian friends who care about you. I just spoke to his doctor and he is doing remarkably well considering that he was run over by a JetSki!! things that could have happened did not and he is in lots of pain, but I suppose that's to be expected considering the circumstances. He had surgery on his spleen and the artery to the spleen. He has broken ribs and chipped vertebrae. All of this is causing much pain, especially in his back. They are going to get him up today for Walking and I dread that for him so please pray because it's going to be very painful. Again, thank all of you and continue to pray for us because that's what we need right now more than anything."

CULLMAN, Ala. — The Cullman County Bosom Buddies Foundation's (CCBBF's) largest fundraiser of the year is coming up and tickets are available now. The Little Pink Dress benefit has successfully raised thousands of dollars over the years.

CCBBF was started by Mary Dyer, who would make cakes for women battling breast cancer in her congregation. Involvement grew and the CCBBF was born. CCBBF Board Member Judy Grissom said she knows the overwhelming success of the benefit would not be possible without those first homemade cakes.

"I always want to thank Mrs. Mary Dyer for making this possible. She was the driving force in making the Cullman County Bosom Buddies Foundation, Inc. a reality.

"Because Mary had the dream and then, she made it her mission, the Foundation has helped many Cullman County cancer survivors in the past 10 years," Grissom shared. "Thank you Miss Mary. We love you!"

The funds raised are used by the CCBBF to assist and support local men and women who are faced with impossible financial situations while undergoing cancer and other vital medical treatments.

They assist with utility bills, transportation costs to and from treatment and food cards to ease the burden further.

Last year's benefit (www.cullmantribune.com/2023/10/05/little-pink-dress-benefit-raises-25k) raised a show-stopping $25,000.

The CCBBF and its board hope that this year is more successful than all the past events. According to Grissom, the event is already shaping up to be a success as pre-purchased tickets have caused the event to change venues from last year's Loft 212, to a larger and more spacious area, allowing more tickets to be sold.

"We needed more space so we are happy to be at The Venue at Cotton Creek," Grissom smiled. "This will be such a fun-filled evening."

Along with the traditional live and silent auctions at the community favorite event, the unofficial but highly anticipated "City vs. County" tip war will be returning, pitting organization against organization as they race to raise the most money.

Locally "famous" servers from the Cullman Police Department, Cullman County Sheriff's Office, City of Cullman and Cullman County will be waiting tables, hoping to score big tips.

Registration for sponsorships and ticket sales for the Little Pink Dress benefit are already underway.

This year, the event will be held Oct. 1 at The Venue at Cotton Creek, with doors opening at 5:30 p.m. and the program beginning at 6. Entertainment and dinner will be on the menu. The $60 ticket price will get you a delectable catered meal, as well as live entertainment from the Active Adult Senior Kickers and the Wallace State Jazz Band, along with live and silent auctions and door prizes.

Tickets and sponsorships can be purchased through Stefani Nelson (245-708-3191 or snelson@alfains.com), Judy Grissom at Options (256-347-5993 or options5993@gmail.com), Better than Before Consignments or online at www.CullmanBosomBuddies.com.

Fox bites Atmore resident; precautions are advised as fox is confirmed as positive for rabies

ADPH
Contributor

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — An older Atmore resident was returning from grocery shopping and unloading her vehicle. While holding a loaf of bread in hand, seemingly from out of nowhere, she was attacked and bitten by a fox.

The fox was taken to the Alabama Department of Public Health Bureau of Clinical Laboratories where it was confirmed positive for rabies. Rabies is a viral disease that can be fatal if untreated.

The resident has since received appropriate medical attention and post-exposure prophylaxis.

"Although rabies is primarily found in wild animals since widespread vaccination of domestic animals began over 70 years ago, it continues to be a public health threat," State Public Health Veterinarian Dr. Dee W. Jones said.

"Although attacks such as this by rabid wildlife are rather uncommon, it highlights the risk rabies continues poses and hopefully reminds people to be aware of the risks and continue to vaccinate their pets."

It is very common for domestic animals and pets to have contact with a wild rabid animal.

Alabama state law requires that dogs, cats and ferrets 12 weeks of age and older be current with rabies vaccination. Rabies vaccines are also available for horses and other livestock if recommended by a veterinarian.

Vaccinating animals reduces the risk of rabies infection should exposure occur; thus, vaccinations protect animals, as well as their owners and caretakers.

Rabies prevention is multifaceted. It involves people taking precautions with wildlife, making sure that their pets are current on rabies vaccinations, and always reporting an animal bite or other exposures to their medical provider and ADPH.

In addition to vaccination, area residents are advised to take the following precautions to avoid possible exposures to rabies:

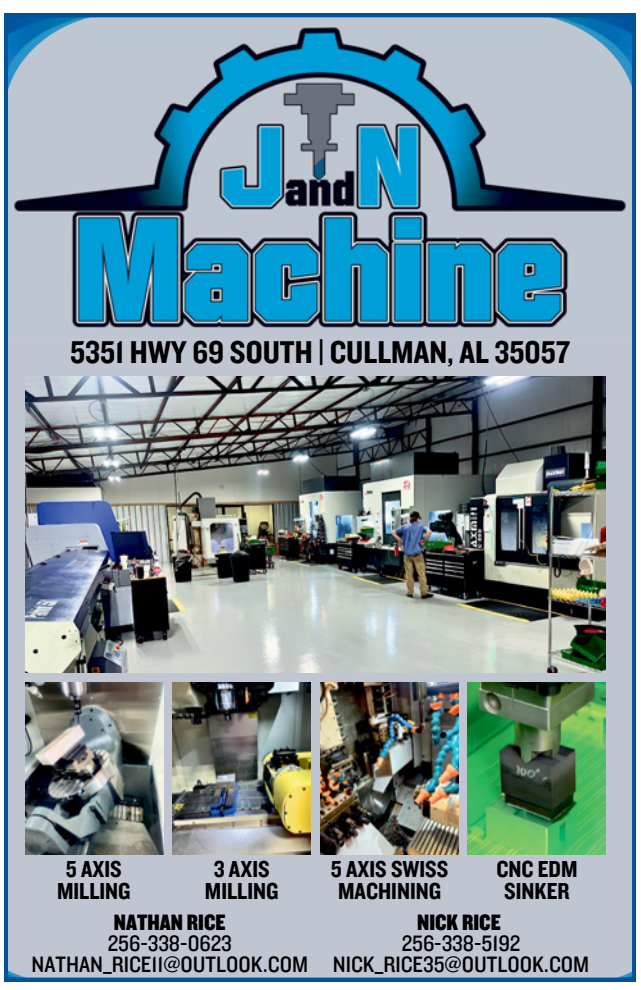

- Do not allow pets to run loose; confine within a fenced-in area or with a leash.
- Do not leave uneaten pet food or scraps near your residence.
- Do not illegally feed or keep wildlife as pets.
- Do not go near wildlife or domestic animals that are acting in a strange or unusual manner.
- Caution children not to go near any stray or wild animal, regardless of its behavior.

Hall of Fame: Royals induct Auburn's Bo Jackson

Jeff Shearer
AU Athletics

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Entering atop a Corvette and taking a slow lap around the stadium where the legend he first fashioned at Auburn further grew, Bo Jackson received a standing ovation Saturday from Kansas City Royals fans, many wearing No. 16 jerseys.

"When I see people wearing my jersey in this day and age it means one thing to me," Jackson said. "That I did something right, and people still respect me for doing those right things when I was younger."

In a pregame ceremony at Kauffman Stadium, National Baseball Hall of Famer member George Brett officially welcomed his former teammate into Royals' royalty.

"I never saw anyone quite like Bo, and I doubt I ever will again," said Brett, minutes before catching Jackson's ceremonial first pitch.

"He is the greatest athlete I have ever seen. He is, and remains, a cultural icon, and today it is my honor and privilege to welcome my friend Bo Jackson into the Royals Hall of Fame."

Kansas City drafted Jackson in the fourth round in 1986, six months after he won the 1985 Heisman Trophy, concluding his Auburn football career as the program's all-time leading rusher, a record Bo still holds four decades later.

To the astonishment of many, Jackson spurned the NFL's Tampa Bay Bucs, which had drafted him No. 1 overall six weeks earlier, and signed instead with the Royals, debuting in the majors on Sept. 2, 1986, after only 53 minor league games.

"The first day I walked in the clubhouse, from having confidence within myself – this isn't from an arrogant standpoint; this is from the fight within me – I knew somebody was going to lose their job," Jackson said. "I'm always striving to be the best even though a lot of times I wasn't. I'm not going to let the guy on the other side of the field outdo me."

Kansas City drafted Jackson, he says, in part because of Bo's baseball coach at Auburn, Hal Baird, who had pitched six seasons in the Royals' organization in the 1970s.

"Coach Baird and (former Royals scouting director) Art Stewart are the reason I became a Royal," Jackson recalled.

"Every other ballclub within the league was afraid to come after me because of that football thing. Art Stewart called Coach Baird and asked if I was serious about baseball.

"Coach Baird said yes, and whoever gets him is going to be lucky to have him, so he is serious. Art Stewart convinced the ownership and everybody to take a chance on me, and I'm glad they did."

That football thing, Bo's "hobby" as he famously referred to it at the time. Beginning in 1987, when the Royals season ended, Jackson joined the Los Angeles Raiders, averaging 5.4 yards per carry over four seasons until a hip injury ended his NFL career.

"It was easy for me," Jackson said of juggling professional sports simultaneously. "The two sports are drastically different. Whenever the baseball season was over, I would take a week off with my family then on the seventh day I would report to Los Angeles and play the next weekend. Just something I did, a normal day in my life."

JASON HANNA/KANSAS CITY ROYALS

Bo Jackson receives his Kansas City Royals Hall of Fame blazer.

"When I see people wearing my jersey in this day and age it means one thing to me. That I did something right, and people still respect me for doing those right things when I was younger."

Jackson averaged 27 home runs in four seasons with the Royals from 1987-90, but the stats only begin to tell the story.

Jackson amazed fans with his batting, running, fielding and throwing exploits that endure to this day via social media, delighting a new generation of viewers, including Jackson's 3-year-old grandson, Aidan, who sat beside his grandfather at a press conference before the ceremony.

"His Nana told him a couple weeks ago, 'I'm sick of watching Bo Jackson highlights,'" Jackson said. "He chastised his grandmother and said, 'Nana, don't say that about Papa. Papa's my best friend.''

To Jackson's left sat his family: his wife Linda, their three children and two grandchildren. To his right were fellow Royals Hall of Famers.

"You are loved and appreciated on both sides," Jackson said.

Nearby sat invited guests, whom Jackson called mentors, including longtime Auburn football orthopedic surgeon Dr. James Andrews and Auburn University Board of Trustees member Jimmy Rane.

"Once you make it up that ladder, always reach back to help someone else come up," Jackson said. "I have a saying: sometime during your day, stop and put some sunshine in somebody's cloud."

Jackson concluded his remarks by thanking Kansas City fans for welcoming him, then and now.

"Thank you, Kansas City. I wouldn't be me without you."

'Be a great leader': Cold Springs' Kortnie Williams reflects on time as an Eagle

KORTNIE WILLIAMS

Cold Springs' Kortnie Williams

BREMEN, Ala. — In this interview, I talked to Cold Springs senior Kortnie Williams about her favorite memories she made playing softball for the Eagles, what it was like playing with some great teammates and everything she learned from that experience.

"My favorite memory was probably when we couldn't get our pitching machine to work right, so we just walked around and talked to each other," Williams said. "It was the best experience I've ever had. I've grown so close to the girls on the team; they are my family now, especially since my little sister, Kaydance Williams, was on varsity with me this year. I learned how to be a better person and leader. Being a senior isn't just about being the oldest on the team. It's about showing your underclassmen how to be the bigger person and how to be a great leader."

Williams played under several coaches during her playing career and soaked up as much as she could from them. She will miss being an Eagle next season and talked about a couple of her favorite games that she was a part of.

"I love all my coaches, and as the years went on, we got closer and closer. They are my second family. They showed me how to be a leader, be the bigger person, and how to push my abilities on and off the field," she said.

"I will remember and miss the overall energy of the fans and how excited they got over a really good play and hit. My favorite games were when we played a doubleheader against Addison and Dora. My teammates had the best energy during those games. We were all cheering and just having fun. I think those games were probably the best that I played all season."

She shared her favorite high school memory from her time at Cold Springs, and why being an Eagle was so special to her.

"My favorite high school memory was our football pep rallies. Everyone got so excited and very competitive during the games that we played," she said.

"What made Cold Springs a special place to go to were the teachers. They make you feel like you can tell them anything. I've definitely gotten closer to some of my teachers over the years. I will remember the football pep rallies and the Friday night football games. They were definitely the best part of my high school experience. I'll miss the underclassmen friends I made over the past two years."

Williams gave some advice to the students that will be starting high school in August, and she was in more than a handful of clubs at Cold Springs and talked about that experience.

"Make friends with the right people. They need to be friends that will encourage and believe in you. Always be a student first. School should always first," she said. "I was a member of the SGA for two years, NHS for three years, the Math Team for three years, FCCLA for two years, yearbook for one year, and NSLS through Wallace State Community College for two years. Being in those clubs taught me how to be a great leader, and how to serve the community."

She tried to be a great role model for a lot of younger people and was given some advice by coach Paige Adams that helped her out a lot during her career.

"I knew that I had to be the bigger person, and I knew that I had to be a leader, because I was the oldest in the classroom and on the field," she said. "Coach Adams' advice to me was to be a dog. She would always say that to us, and it stuck with me. It taught me that I needed to work hard for the things that I want and need to accomplish. I want people to remember how funny I am with the people I'm close to, and how kind I am to others. I try to encourage and bring the best out of others around me."

Williams talked about some role models that she looked up to and gave some advice to those people that want to be where she's at right now. She played alongside her sister, Kaydance, for one year and had a great time sharing the field with her.

"In softball, my role models were my coaches and the seniors that came before me. I had always looked up to them and wanted to be just like them. In school, my role models were my teachers. They always wanted what was best for me, and I hope that in the future, I can be just as encouraging as they are," she said.

"My advice to them is to push yourself to be the best version of yourself. Always be a leader in every situation. Listen to what others have to say. Encourage others to be a better person, and always have fun in everything that you do."

She added, "It was an amazing experience. She made this season the best softball season I've ever had. She pushed me to be a better athlete, and she wanted me to be a better player. I wanted to be the bigger person for her. I love getting to watch her play softball; she is a very talented athlete. I love her with all my heart, and it's so sad to think that we won't play on the same team anymore."

91st ADSFR adds dock space, new categories

David Rainer
Ala. Dept. of Conservation and Nat. Resources

DAVID RAINER

Anglers in the 91st ADSFR have the choice of weighing their jack crevalle or participating in the catch-and-release category.

A new dock and boardwalk, a new live weigh-in category and a new species for catch and release are among the highlights for the 91st annual Alabama Deep Sea Fishing Rodeo (ADSFR), set for July 19-21 at the rodeo site on Dauphin Island.

The new dock and boardwalk will increase the capacity for the number of boats that can be tied up to head to the weigh-in station, and the boardwalk will also provide access to the north side of the rodeo property.

"We added a dock 7 to help alleviate pressure during the busy weigh-in times," said Matt Glass, ADSFR President. "Also, between docks 1 and 2, we added a platform across that with pilings and stringers to make a huge platform. The reason we did that was to be able to tie up two small boats on the end of the platform or back two big boats into the slips to get to the crane to weigh in your big fish like sharks and billfish. Technically, now you can have four big boats pull in all at once.

"We extended the boardwalk all the way to the edge of the property on the north side to give scientists more room to work. We set some pilings up there so the Sheriff's Flotilla and the scientists can tie up their boats so they're not taking up dock space. And the boardwalk gives them easy access to their work area."

Along with about 4,000 rodeo anglers, marine scientists flock to the ADSFR because of the access to a wide variety of species as well as the larger size of fish that are caught during the competition. Marine scientists will collect a great deal of data during the three-day tournament.

Dr. Sean Powers, rodeo judge and head of the University of South Alabama Marine & Environmental Sciences Department, will bring a crew of students and researchers to sample a variety of fish. Dr. Marcus Drymon of Mississippi State University will bring a team to take a samples from the shark species brought to the scales at the rodeo site. The Dauphin Island Sea Lab will also have a crew at the rodeo to assist with the sampling.

One of the new features that will aid marine scientists is the addition of the catch-and-release category for jack crevalle.

"One of our scientists, Dr. Marcus Drymon, was very adamant about it," Glass said. "He's been doing a lot of research on it, and he's working with scientists in south Florida. He thought it would be a good idea. Up here in the northern Gulf, they're everywhere. They're using this to learn more about the fish, and we're always happy to help the scientists."

In the CCA (Coastal Conservation Association) of Alabama Live Weigh-In Special Awards category, flounder has been added to the species that can be brought to the weigh-in site alive and be entered to win a variety of prizes. Previously, the category allowed only redfish and speckled trout.

"We had several people ask about adding flounder last year," Glass said. "I talked to the board, and the scientists thought that would be a great idea."

Conservation Commissioner Chris Blankenship applauded the evolution of the ADSFR, which has been a part of his life for a long, long time.

"I love the ADSFR," Commissioner Blankenship said. "Growing up on Dauphin Island and then working for the Alabama Department of Conservation, I have attended or fished in more than half of the 91 rodeos. A lot has changed with the event over those years. I think the ADSFR is in the best place ever with the way the event is done now with a focus on science, conservation and highlighting the great inshore and offshore fishing we have in Alabama."

The red snapper category and Craneworks Red Snapper Jackpot are pretty much locks right now with the projections from the Alabama Department of Conservation and Natural Resources' Marine Resources Division (MRD).

Snapper Check data indicate there will be plenty of red snapper quota remaining for the rodeo. The 2024 catch limit is 659,654 pounds. As of June 17, MRD's data showed that the harvest had not reached the 200,000-pound mark.

"It's looking really good for red snapper," Glass said. "Harvest numbers right now are low, so the statistics show we will absolutely have the red snapper. It's a huge part of the rodeo."

Ticket holders who weigh in a legal fish in the 91st rodeo will be eligible for more than $450,000 in cash and prizes, including a Contender 25 bay boat with a Yamaha 250-horsepower outboard. The winner of the boat-motor package will be selected in a random drawing from all participants who weigh in a legal fish or enter a legal fish in the catch-and-release categories during the tournament. Your chances of winning the top prize packages are the same if you catch a 14-inch ladyfish in the surf along the Alabama Gulf Coast or haul in a huge billfish from the Gulf of Mexico.

The ADSFR started as a tarpon tournament in 1929, long before a bridge allowed easy access to the island, with 250 anglers. With only a break during World War II, the rodeo has grown exponentially and was designated the world's largest saltwater fishing tournament by the Guinness Book of World Records in 2011. This year's rodeo is expected to draw about 4,000 anglers from all across the nation.

One aspect of the ADSFR that has also grown exponentially is the sale of rodeo t-shirts. Despite having a multiple-window t-shirt sales booth, the line waiting for t-shirts has gotten longer and longer each year. To alleviate some of the wait for t-shirts for the anglers who come to the rodeo site by boat, the rodeo is receiving help this year from one of its sponsors to sell t-shirts near the weigh dock.

"One of our sponsors, Almost Home Portable Buildings, donated a building, and we're going to use it as a dock t-shirt booth," Glass said. "We're placing the building near the crane so that anyone who is coming by boat can get their t-shirts there and won't have to get in line at the other booth.

"One of the great things about being president is I got to design the artwork for the t-shirt. Everybody loves our t-shirts, and everybody wants this year's edition. It was awesome to work with local artist Brandon Finnorn to design this year's t-shirt."

One of the highlights of last year's rodeo was the state record tiger shark of 1,019 pounds, caught by Brett Rutledge. This year's rodeo will again feature shark categories for tiger shark and bull shark. Each shark weighed must be at least 80 inches, measured from the tip of the snout to the fork in the tail. The Gulf Hauling and Construction Shark Jackpot will also be divided into individual species.

The South Response Services King Mackerel Jackpot, Yamaha Motors Speckled Trout Jackpot and the Meadow Electric Big Game Jackpot are also available. Regular rodeo categories include 15 inshore species and 18 offshore species. Each category has a minimum size. Go to https://adsfr.com/rodeo-rules to find the rodeo species and minimum sizes.

Extension agent gives tips for taking care of tomatoes

Katie Nichols
Alabama Cooperative Extension System

ALABAMA COOPERATIVE EXTENSION SYSTEM

AUBURN UNIVERSITY, Ala. — Tomatoes are a popular garden crop, but they can be high maintenance. It can be difficult to make decisions about tomato care without a solid plan. Eliminate the questions and begin tomato season with proper care.

Weather, insects and viral, fungal and bacterial problems are all challenges every gardener faces when growing backyard tomatoes. Having an awareness of potential problems before they arise is one way to make sure the backyard tomatoes thrive. Mallory Kelley, an Alabama Cooperative Extension System home grounds, gardens and home pests regional agent, said there are many things to watch for when growing tomatoes to ensure a healthy crop. As the hot and humid summer starts up, Kelley provides the following tips to keep plants healthy.

Watering and mulch

When it comes to water, Kelley recommends starting with drip irrigation or hand watering only at the surface of the soil to avoid splashing. Then, gardeners should prune off any of the tomato plants' lower limbs that are touching the soil and apply mulch.

"Mulching your tomatoes keeps the plants moisture level consistent and will help prevent blossom end rot," Kelley said. "Applying mulch also helps control weeds and eliminates competition for the fertilizer you have applied."

Mulch also creates a barrier between the plant leaves and the soil to suppress many of the fungal problems that come from the surface of the soil.

Scout for disease and insects

For diseases and insects, time is of the essence. Remove yellow and brown-spotted leaves as soon as they appear. If a fungicide plan is not in place, start a fungicide application to prevent early blight.

"No tomato grower can avoid this problem," Kelley said. "It's best to apply a preventative fungicide when the plants are healthy and there is no disease present. Products with the active ingredients chlorothalonil and mancozeb will control early blight."

Kelley said copper is an option to control bacterial issues. It is best to scout daily for all of these problems, as well as insects.

"Go out and inspect for armyworms, fruit worms, hornworms and stinkbugs," she said. "These are the main insect problems on tomatoes."

Products that contain Bacillus thuringensis (Bt) will work when the worms are young and Bt will not kill any other bugs — only the worms eating the plant and tomatoes.

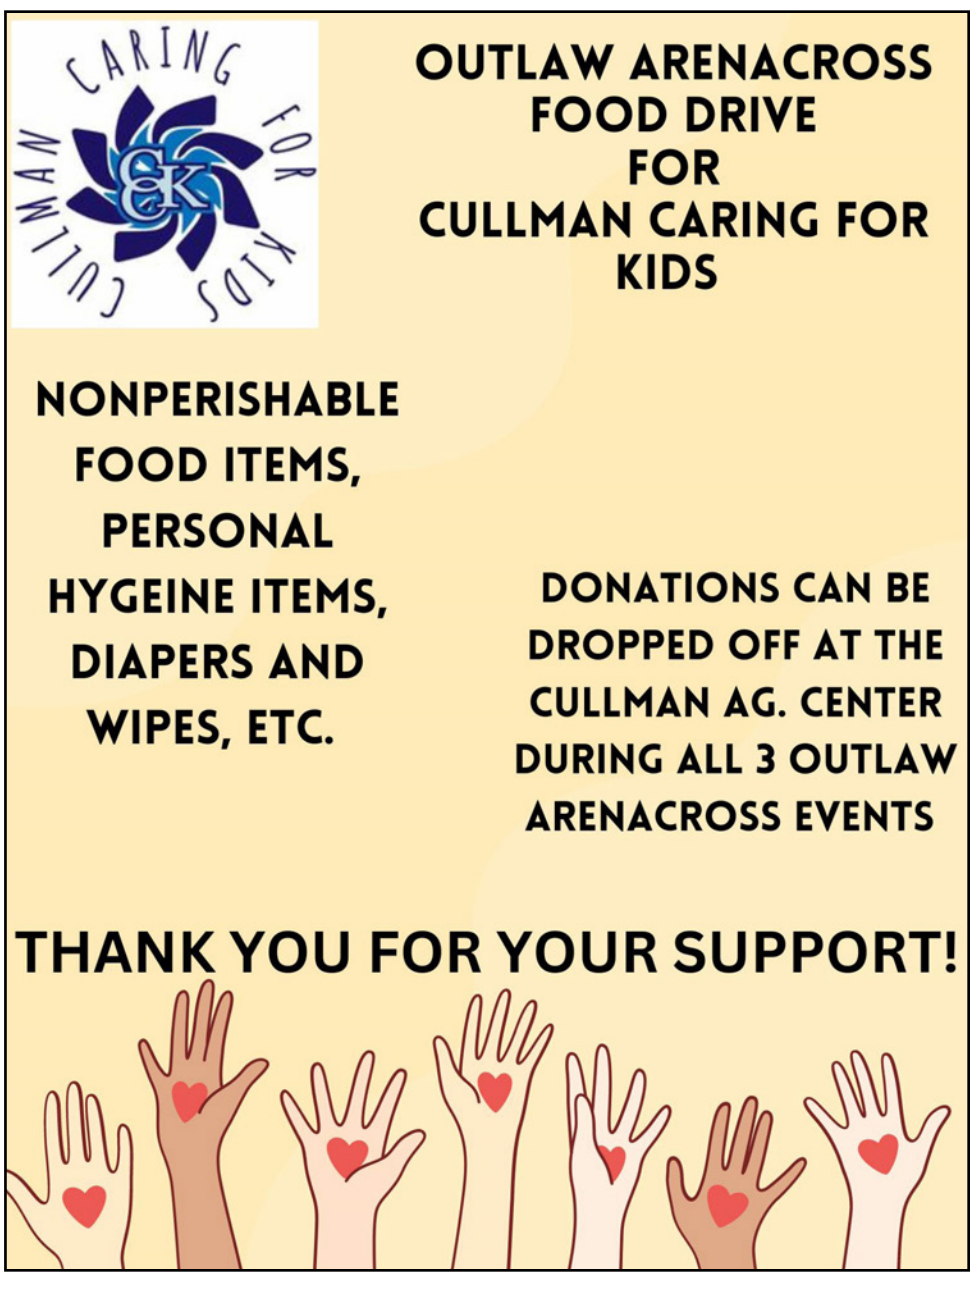

Gardeners can also use products containing carbaryl to control larger worms. Kelley said carbaryl will eliminate a wide variety of insects it comes in contact with—even larger worms if they ingest enough of it. However, the damage has been done by the time worms are large, so treatment may not be necessary. Bifenthrin is another insecticide that will control stinkbugs and some of the other pests gardeners may find.

"Don't wait until your plant has no more leaves before you start your search for the hornworm," Kelley said. "Scout today because the plant may not be there tomorrow."

BILLY BOB'S STORIES AND STUFF

Freedom has never been free

Bill King
Tribune
Contributor

It has been eight years since we landed at Plymouth. No, we were not Pilgrims onboard the Mayflower. We were vacationers onboard a new Ford Fusion. Nobody died on our pilgrimage, however, there was a time or two when we wondered if we might! We didn't cross an ocean to get there, but we did cross nine states that didn't exist back in 1620. Four-hundred-twenty-four years have now passed since they landed in the new country. Some died on the journey, and half of them didn't survive their first year here. Multitudes have died since then, simply so we could stay here and live in freedom.

I've never seen the Mayflower, but I have seen a life-size replica of it. I was stunned at how small it seemed. The ceiling in the lower deck was so low I had to duck. I could not imagine 102 passengers, plus the captain, crew, and animals on board that thing for 66 days.

Because it was a cargo ship, there were no cabins, bunks, or bathrooms. They actually continued to live onboard the ship, in Cape Cod and Plymouth, for quite some time after they arrived here. That was because they had nowhere else to live. They had to build houses. Why? Why were they willing to put themselves through such struggles? Because they were searching for freedom...freedom from England and from the Church of England. Freedom almost always comes with a price.

On the night of April 18, 1775, a silversmith named Paul Revere rode through the streets of Boston at midnight shouting, "The British are coming, the British are coming!" A life-size statue of Revere still stands in Boston, behind the Old North Church. That church is the famous site where lanterns were hung and from which the famous, "One if by land, two is by sea" signal is said to have been sent out. The British armies attacked at nearby Lexington and Concord and the Revolutionary War officially began. This was the war that paid for our freedom, our independence, with the lives of the American settlers.

In nearby Quincy, now a suburb of Boston, stands three houses where our first vice president, who became our second president, lived. He was one of the 56 signers of the Declaration of Independence. John Adam's father first farmed that land in Massachusetts that became his son's. Young Adams wanted to follow in his father's steps and become a farmer too.

His father did not wish so, so he took him out to the fields and worked him as hard as possible. He had hoped when he realized how hard that work was, that he would change his mind. Instead, at the end of the day, he said, "This work suits me." His father replied, "Well, it does not suit me for you." John Adams Jr. farmed that land for the rest of his life, but he also went on to graduate from Harvard, became a lawyer, and one who worked diligently to gain our freedom. After Adams retired from public office, he spent his remaining days farming and living out his life in freedom on his farm. He died there on July 4, 1826, at the age of 90.

We, as a nation, still remain free 248 years after the Declaration of Independence was signed. We still have religious freedom as well. War was fought to gain such freedoms, and wars have followed to safeguard such freedoms.

May we never take such privileges lightly and without thanksgiving to God above and for the men and women who died here below.

POET'S CORNER

The Storyteller | By: Randy C. Hale

Our grandmother told us stories of how Beowulf killed Grendel, and how Prince Prospero failed to escape the red death.

She told of local lore.
How one of our town's barber's kidnapped and boy in 62.
About the famous trial and the horror of the crime.

There was the tornado of 1949, when some of her neighbors died.
And the one in 58, that blew the school away.

One of my favorites was about a woman who showed up at the local food town wearing only a guitar.
I laughed with her, trying to imagine it all.

There were vivid ones about her life, from a wagon trip from Virginia to the country roads of Alabama.
Of living through the depression, getting married at 15 and raising children in trying times.

Superstitions, panthers and mad dogs on the loose, chilled us to the bone, through and through.
But there were warm and fuzzy ones too.
Bunnies, Cubby bears, princesses and adventures of children that could be our very own.

Stories of King David, Elijah, and Samson coming from to life from the Bible she so well knew.
From ancient texts and from her creative mind came the best stories our world has ever known.

Murphy (from Front)

Cheyenne Sharp
cheyenne@cullmantribune.com

CULLMAN, Ala. — The Link of Cullman County recently welcomed a familiar face to a new position. Cayla Grace Murphy is now over the nonprofit's marketing efforts.

Murphy is no stranger to nonprofit and community work. Beginning in her teens, she, along with a group of artist friends, would round up community volunteers and host fundraisers, auctions and supply drives for various organizations.

Her professional resume boasts tenures at the United Way of Cullman County and The Cullman Tribune, as well as in-depth volunteer service throughout the community and at The Link itself. Murphy is a former stay-at-home mother to 2-year-old River Jane, her daughter (or cat, or dinosaur or armadillo, depending on the time of day River herself is asked). When faced with the isolation of shared custody, the mother with idle hands began to put her hands to use with volunteer work. It was through her work with The Link and its food pantry, The Master's Hand, that Murphy learned about the organization's job opening.

"I came to The Link initially as a volunteer," Murphy smiles. "I thought, with all this time on my hands, I should make good use of it. I started volunteering at The Link's food pantry and was asked by our director Melissa Betts if I would be open to coming on staff to continue telling the stories of the people we help and highlight some of our helpers."

Though her official title within the organization is marketing coordinator, Murphy wears many hats. From creating press releases and graphics to organizing and editing video content, her goal is always to spotlight the work being done at The Link and give the staff, volunteers and clients a voice in the community, something Murphy is passionate about.

"Marketing for a nonprofit can be difficult – it's not like we're advertising a physical product that you can hold in your hand. My job is to communicate our needs and the needs of the neighbors we serve by telling the stories of people we see every day and how we can help them. Not just as The Link, but as the community of Cullman at large," she said.

Murphy believes bringing her real-world experience of being both a volunteer and a client will have a positive community impact for the organization. She noted that often there can be a disconnect between nonprofit workers and the clients they serve. The clients in need find it difficult to relate to the caseworkers; likewise, caseworkers can then find it hard to properly advocate if they've never actually been in the clients' shoes.

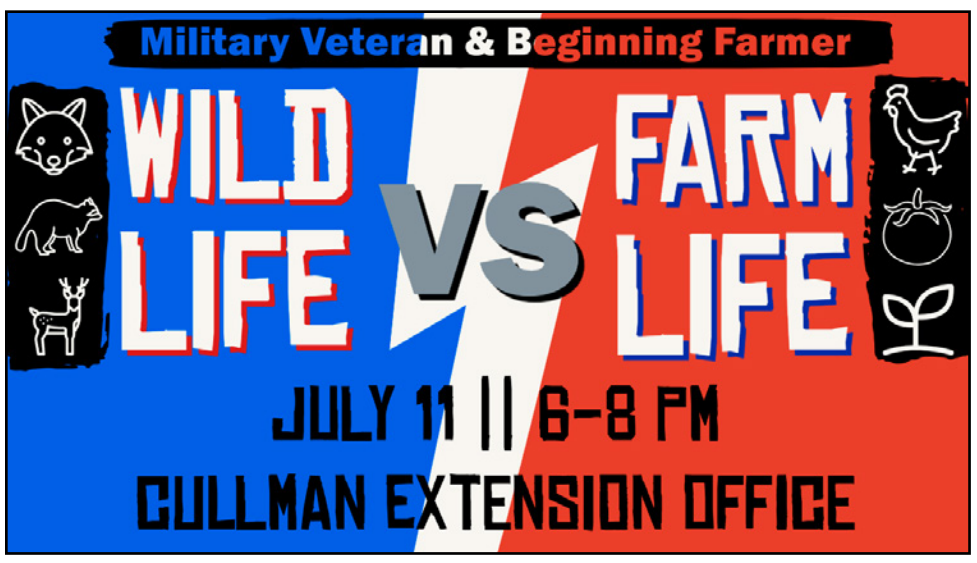

"Having been both the worker and the client at different stages of my life, I think it makes me more primed to advocate and communicate effectively with our neighbors in need," said Murphy.

As a young professional, Murphy said, she wholeheartedly believes that the nonprofit world is shifting toward a younger crowd. The Link of Cullman County's staff consists mainly of individuals younger than 30. Murphy's obligations at The Link are to make community work appealing to younger givers and helpers, creating the next group of community members willing to give back and make a difference.

"There is so much opportunity right here in our community to get the next generation involved," Murphy shared. "I want to be one of the ones pulling them along to the front lines."
